STRANGULATION.† n. s. [strangulation, Fr.
Cotgrave.] The act of strangling; suffocation; the state of being strangled.

A sponge is mischievous, not in itself, for its powder is harmless; but because, being received into the stomach, it swelleth, and, occasioning its continual distension, induceth a strangulation.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

The reduction of the jaws is difficult, and, if they be not timely reduced, there happen paralysis and strangulation. Wiseman.

STRANGURIOUS.* adj. [from strangury.]
Denoting the pain of strangury.

I was often fretted with strangurious symptoms.
Cheyne, Engl. Malady, (1733), p. 321.

STRANGURY.† n. s. [σπαργυρία; strangurie, Fr.] A difficulty of urine attended with pain.

The liquor of the birch is most powerful for the dissolving of the stone in the bladder, bloody water, and strangury. Evelyn.

STRAP.† n. s. [Γροππ, Sax. strop, Teut. stroppa, Ital.] A narrow long slip of cloth or leather.

These clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too; as they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps. Shaks. Tw. Night.

I found but one husband, a lively cobbler, that kicked and spurred all the while his wife was carrying him on; and had scarce passed a day without giving her the discipline of the strap.
Addison, Spect.

To STRAP. v. a. [from strap.] To beat with a strap.

STRAPPA'DO.† n. s. [old Fr. strapade,
"sorte de punition militaire." Roq.
Supposed to be from the Ital. strappare, to pull with force.] A kind of military torture formerly practised in drawing up an offender to the top of a beam, and letting him fall; in consequence of which, dislocation of a limb usually happened.

Were I at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Would you have him tortur'd? —
I would have him prov'd. —
Best try him then with goads, or burning irons;
Put him to the strappado. B. Jonson, Fox.

They would meet every where with chains and strappadoes. Glanville, Serm. p. 213.

To STRAPPA'DO. v. a. [from the noun.]
To torture.

They had neither been haled into your gehenna at Lambeth, nor strappadoed with an oath ex officio by your bowmen of the arches.
Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

STRAPPING. adj. Vast; large; bulky.
Used of large men or women in contempt.

STRATA. n. s. [The plural of stratum, Lat.] Beds; layers. A philosophical term.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata, or layers, placed one upon another; in like manner as any earthy sediment, settling down from a fluid, will naturally be. Woodward.

With how much wisdom are the strata laid,
Of different weight and of a different kind,
Of sundry forms for sundry ends design'd!
Blackmore.

STRATAGEM.† n. s. [stratageme, Fr.
στρατήγημα, Gr. from στρατήγος, to command an army. Strategem has accordingly been the orthography of some.

Of this word, at the beginning of the seventeenth century, the following notice is found in the World of Wonders, (1608), p. 110. "See then as fine and cunning a stratageme as can be devised; for I hope I may be bold to use this word, seeing of late it hath found such good entertainment amongst us."

1. An artifice in war; a trick by which an enemy is deceived.

John Talbot, I did send for thee,
To tutor thee in stratagems of war.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Ev'ry minute now
Should be the father of some stratagem.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

It seemeth reasonable, and in piety allowable, that stratagems and subtilities may be used in the war, yet with such caution, as the same may stand with fidelity and honour; for fraud being used, contrary to contracts and agreements made with the enemy, is mere treachery.
Raleigh, Arts of Emp. ch. 23.

2. An artifice; a trick by which some advantage is obtained.

Rouse up your courage, call up all your counsels,
And think on all those stratagems which nature
Keeps ready to encounter sudden dangers.
Denham, Sophy.

Those oft are stratagems which errours seem;
Nor is it Homer nodes, but we who dream. Pope.

STRATAGEMICAL.* adj. [from stratagem.]
Full of stratagems.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

His wife, to gain entirely his affections, sent him
this stratagemical epistle.

Swift, in the Tripos assigned to him by Dr. Barret.
STRATH.* n. s. [ystriad, Welsh.] A vale;
a bottom.

They dwelt in valleys or straths, bounded on each side by ridges of hills.

Bp. Horsley's Biblical Criticism, vol. iv. p. 468.
Aimore is situated in a narrow valley or strath, called Strathspey, from its being intersected by the river Spey. Garnett, Tour, ii. 38.

STRATIFICATION.* n. s. [from stratify.] Arrangement of different matter; arrangement in beds or layers.

A mass in which there is no stratification.
Dr. Hutton, Theory of the Earth, (1796), ii. 307.

To STRATIFY.† v. a. [stratifier, Fr. from stratum, Lat.] To range in beds or layers. A chymical term.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping it red hot, stratified with coal-dust and wood-ashes, &c. Hill, Man's Med.

STRATO-CRACY.* n. s. [στρατός, Gr. an army, and κρατος, power.] A military government.

Ever since the invasion of Kouli Khan, Indostan, from being a well-regulated government, became a scene of mere anarchy or stratocracy; every great man protecting himself in his tyranny by his soldiers. Guthrie, India.

STRATOGRAPHY.* n. s. [stratographie, Fr. stratos, and γραφω, Gr.] Description of whatever relates to an army.

STRATUM.* n. s. [Latin.] A bed; a layer. A term of philosophy.

Another was found in a perpendicular fissure of a stratum of stone in Langron iron-mine, Cumberland. Woodward.

Drill'd through the sandy stratum, ev'ry way
The waters with the sandy stratum rise. Thomson.

STRAUGHT.* pret. and part. Stretched. Obsolete in England; but used (as stracht) in Scotland.

'Tweny fadom of brede the armes straight.

Striking me down on the place, where yet I lie straight. Shelton, Transl. of D. Quix. iii. 1.

STRAW.† n. s. [ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, Saxon; stroo, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — The Saxon forms of this word are also ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, and the last of which is our old English. "Of stre many a load." Chaucer, Kn. Tale. Our northern word is still streea.]

1. The stalk on which corn grows, and from which it is threshed.

I can counterfeit the deep tragedian,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw, Intending deep suspicion. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Plate sin with gold,

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

Apples in hay and straw ripened apparently; but the apple in the straw more. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

My new straw-hat, that's trimly lin'd with green,
Let Peggy wear. Gay, Pastorals.

More light he treads, more tall he seems to rise,
And struts a straw-breadth nearer to the skies. Tickell.

2. Any thing proverbially worthless.

Thy arms, thy liberty, beside
All that's on th' outside of thy hide,
Are mine by military law,
Of which I will not bate one straw. Hudibras.

'Tis not a straw matter whether the main cause

To STRAW.* See To STREW.

STRAWBERRY.† n. s. [fragaria, Latin; ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, Saxon. Mr. H. Tooke considers strawberry as straw'd-berry, stray-berry, from straw, or strew. He would have been pleased to find, in a curious old book, his statement partly illustrated; the strawberry being there called "from the manner in which it is set in beds, not cast in heaps, but, as it were, strawed here and there at manifest distances." Dyet's Dry Dinner, 1599.] A plant. Miller.

Content with food, which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they feed. Dryden.
Strawberries, by their fragrant smell, seem to be cordial: the seeds obtained by shaking the ripe fruit in winter are an excellent remedy against the stone. The juice of strawberries and lemons in spring-water is an excellent drink in bilious fevers. Arbutnot on Diet.

STRAWBERRY Tree. n. s. [arbutus, Lat.] It is ever-green, the leaves roundish and serrated on the edges: the fruit is of a fleshy substance, and very like a strawberry. Miller.

STRAWBUILT. adj. [straw and built.] Made up of straw.

They on the smoothed plank,
The suburb of their strawbuilt citadel,
New rubb'd with balm, expatiate. Milton.

STRAWCOLOURED. adj. [straw and colour.] Of a light yellow.

I will discharge it in your strawcolour'd beard. Shakespeare.

STRAWSTUFFED.* adj. [straw and stuff.] Stuffed with straw.

So rides he mounted on the market-day
Upon a straw-stuff'd pannel all the way. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 2.

STRAWWORM. n. s. [straw and worm; phryganion, Lat.] A worm bred in straw.

STRAWY.† adj. [from straw.]

1. Made of straw; consisting of straw.
There the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath. Shakespeare.

In a field of corn, blown upon by the wind,
there will appear waves of a colour differing from that of the rest; the wind, by depressing some of the ears, and not others, makes the one reflect more from the lateral and strawy parts than the rest. Boyle on Colours.

2. Like straw; light.
Luther hath these words: the epistle — is contentious, swelling, dry, strawy.

Knots, Char. Maint. &c. in Chillingworth, ch. 2. § 8.

To STRAY.† v. n. [stroe, Danish, to scatter; straviare, Italian, to wander. Dr. Johnson. — To stray, is the Sax. ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, to scatter. The Goth. strawan, Sax. ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, proceed from straw, or, as our peasantry still pronounce it, strah; and astray, or astrayed, means strawed, scattered and dispersed as the straw is about the fields. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. i. 469.]

1. To wander; to rove.
My eye, descending from the hill, surveys
Where Thames among the wanton valley strays. Denham.

Lo, the glad gales o'er all her beauties stray,
Breathe on her lips, and in her bosom play. Pope.

2. To rove out of the way; to range beyond the proper limits.

What grace hath thee now hither brought this way?
Or doest thy feeble feet unweeting hither stray? Spenser.

No: where can I stray,
Save back to England? all the world's my way. Shakespeare.

She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneeling prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shakespeare.

Wand'rest thou within this lucid orb,
And stray'd from those fair fields of light above,
Amidst this new creation want'st a guide
To reconduct thy steps? Dryden.

3. To err; to deviate from the right.
We have erred and strayed. Common Prayer.

To STRAY. v. a. To mislead. Obsolete.

Hath not else his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love? Shaks.

STRAY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any creature wandering beyond its limits; any thing lost by wandering.

She hath herself not only well defended,
But taken and impounded as a stray
The king of Scots. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Should I take you for a stray,
You must be kept a year and day. Hudibras.

When he has traced his talk through all its wild rambles, let him bring home his stray; not like the lost sheep with joy, but with tears of penitence. Gov. of the Tongue.

Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a stray. Dryden.

He cries out, Neighbour, hast thou seen a stray Of bullocks and of heifers pass this way? Addison.

2. Act of wandering.

I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate. Shakespeare.

STRAYER.* n. s. [from stray.] One who strays; a wanderer. Huloet.

Hubberdin, an old divine of Oxford; a great strailer abroad in all quarters of the realm. Fox, Acts, &c. of Bp. Latimer.

STRAYING.* n. s. [from stray.] The act of roving; the act of going astray.

Do you see thousand little motes and atoms wandering up and down in a sun-beam? It is God that so peoples it; and he guides their innumerable and irregular strayings. Bp. Hopkins, Expos. and Disc. p. 267.

STREAK. n. s. [ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, Saxon; strecke, Dutch; stacca, Ital.] A line of colour different from that of the ground. Sometimes written strake.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the lated traveller astray,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

What mean those colour'd streaks in heaven,
Distended, as the brow of God appears'd? Milton, P. L.

The night comes on, we eager to pursue
Till the last streaks of dying day withdraw,
And doubtful moonlight did our rage deceive. Dryden.

Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear;
How ruddy, like your lips, their streaks appear! Dryden.

While the fantastick tulip strives to break
In two-fold beauty, and a parted streak. Prior.

To STREAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stripe; to variegate in hues; to dapple.

All the yearlings which were streak'd and pied,
Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

A mule, admirably streaked and dappled with white and black. Sandys, Journey.

To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east,
With first approach of light we must be ris'n,
And at our pleasant labour, to reform
Yon flowery arbours. Milton, P. L.

Now let us leave this earth, and lift our eye
To the large convex of yon azure sky:
Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd with glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chasing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

2. To stretch. Obsolete.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks;
Where, glistening round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.

STREAKY. adj. [from streak.] Striped; variegated by hues.

When the hoary head is hid in snow,
The life is in the leaf, and still between
The fits of falling snows appears the streaky green. Dryden.

STREAM. n. s. [ꝛꝛꝛꝛꝛ, Saxon; strom, Dutch.]

1. A running water; the course of running water; current.

As plays the sun upon the glassy stream,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He brought streams out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers. Ps. lxxviii. 16.

Cocytus nam'd, of lamentation loud
Heard in the rueful stream; fierce Phlegethon.

Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage;
Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
Lethæ, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her wat'ry labyrinth. Milton, P. L.

O could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as thou art my theme!
Tho' deep yet clear, tho' gentle yet not dull,
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full.

Thus from one common source our streams divide;
Ours is the Trojan, yours the Arcadian side.

Divided interests, while thou think'st to sway,
Draw like two brooks thy middle stream away.

2. Any thing issuing from a head, and moving forward with continuity of parts.
The breath of the Lord is like a stream of brimstone.

You, Drances, never want a stream of words.

The stream of beneficence hath, by several rivulets which have since fallen into it, wonderfully enlarged its current.

3. Any thing forcible and continued.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather.

It is looked upon as insolence for a man to adhere to his own opinion against the current stream of antiquity.

4. Course; current.

The very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must give him a better proclamation.

TO STREAM. v. n. [streyma, Icelandic.]

1. To flow; to run in a continuous current.

God bade the ground be dry,
All but between those banks where rivers now
Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train.

On all sides round

Streams the black blood, and smokes upon the ground.

2. To emit a current; to pour out water in a stream; to be overflowed.

Then grateful Greece with streaming eyes would raise Historic marbles to record his praise.

3. To issue forth with continuance, not by fits.

Now to impartial love, that good most high,

Do my sighs stream.

From opening skies may streaming glories shine,

And saints embrace thee.

TO STREAM. † v. a.

1. To pour; to send forth.

She at length will stream

Some dew of grace into my wither'd heart,

After long sorrow and consuming smart.

2. To mark with colours or embroidery in long tracks.

The herald's mantle is stream'd with gold.

STREAMER. n. s. [from stream.] An ensign; a flag; a pennon; any thing flowing loosely from a stock.

His brave fleet,

With silken streamers the young Phæbus fanning.

The rosy morn began to rise,

And wav'd her saffron streamer through the skies.

Brave Rupert from afar appears,

Whose waving streamers the glad general knows.

Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage;
Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
Lethæ, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her wat'ry labyrinth.

O could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as thou art my theme!
Tho' deep yet clear, tho' gentle yet not dull,
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full.

Thus from one common source our streams divide;
Ours is the Trojan, yours the Arcadian side.

Divided interests, while thou think'st to sway,
Draw like two brooks thy middle stream away.

Any thing issuing from a head, and moving forward with continuity of parts.
The breath of the Lord is like a stream of brimstone.

You, Drances, never want a stream of words.

The stream of beneficence hath, by several rivulets which have since fallen into it, wonderfully enlarged its current.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather.

It is looked upon as insolence for a man to adhere to his own opinion against the current stream of antiquity.

The man of sense his meat devours;
But only smells the peel and flowers:
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer. Prior.

STREAMLET. n. s. [from stream.] A small stream.

Unnumber'd glittering streamlets play'd,
And hurled every where their waters sheen.

Nature I'll court in her sequester'd haunts,
By mountain, meadow, streamlet, grove, or cell:
Where the pois'd lark his evening ditty chaunts,
And health, and peace, and contemplation dwell.

His last cascade — is formed by the same stream which runs through Virgil's grove, but somewhat augmented by a few streamlets which it meets in its passage.

STREAMY. adj. [from stream.]

1. Abounding in running water.

However streamy now, adust and dry,
Deny'd the goddess water; where deep Melas,
And rocky Cratis flow, the chariot smok'd Obscure with rising dust.

2. Flowing with a current.

Before him flaming his enormous shield,
Like the broad sun, illum'd all the field;
His nodding helm emits a streamy ray.

TO STREEK. v. a. [repeccan, Saxon, expandere, to stretch.] To lay out a dead body. North.

Durand gives a pretty exact account of some of the ceremonies used at laying out the body, as they are at present practised in the north of England, where the laying out is called streaking.

STREET. † n. s. [stræte, Saxon; strasse, German; strada, Spanish and Italian; streede, Danish; stræet, Dutch; stratum, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — To these words Wachter and Serenius add the Welsh gstrid, Icel. stracta, Su. Goth. stret; and consider them derived from the verbs signifying to tread, as tretten, Germ. traeda, Su. Goth. having the s (which is common) prefixed.]

1. A way, properly a paved way, between two rows of houses.

He led us through fair streets; and all the way we went there were gathered people on both sides, standing in a row.

The streets are no larger than alleys.

Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine;
Witness the streets of Sodom.

The Italians say the ancients always considered the situation of a building, whether it were high or low, in an open square, or in a narrow street, and more or less deviated from their rule of art.

When you tattle with some crouny servant in the same street, leave your own street-door open.

2. Proverbially, a publick place.

That there be no leading into captivity, and no complaining in our streets.

Our public ways would be so crowded, that we should want street-room.

Let us reflect upon what we daily see practised in the world, and can we believe, if an apostle of Christ appeared in our streets, he would retract his caution, and command us to be conform'd to the world?

3. A common prostitute that offers herself to sale in the open street.

STREETWALKER. n. s. [street and walk.]

A common prostitute that offers herself to sale in the open street.

STREETWARD, or STRE'TWARD. n. s. [street and ward.] An officer who formerly took care of the streets. See COWEL.

STREIGHT.  adj.*

1. Narrow. See STRAIGHT, and STRAIT.

2. [Strictus, Lat.] Restrained.

Whereas he meant his corrosives t' apply,
And with straight diet tame his stubborn malady.

STREIGHT.  adv.* [from the adjective.]

Strictly.

My lord me sent, and straight beight

To seek occasion.

STREIGHT.  n. s.* See STRAIT.

STRENE.  n. s.* [streng, Saxon, stirps.]

Race; offspring; now strain. Chaucer,

Rom. R.

STRENGTH. n. s. [strengð, Saxon.]

1. Force; vigour; power of the body.

But strength from truth divided, and from just Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise.

Thou must outlive

Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change

To wither'd, weak, and grey.

The insulting Trojan came,

And menac'd us with force, our fleet with flame:

Was it the strength of his tongue-valiant lord,

In that black hour, that sav'd you from the sword?

2. Power of endurance; firmness; durability; toughness; hardness.

Not founded on the brittle strength of bones.

Firm Dorick pillars found the solid base,

The fair Corinthian crown the higher space,

And all below is strength, and all above is grace.

3. Vigour of any kind; power of any kind.

Strength there must be, either of love, or war,

even such contrary ways leading to the same unity.

God, in all things wise and just,

Hinder'd not Satan to attempt the mind

Of man, with strength entire, and free-will arm'd.

This act

Shall crush the strength of Satan.

4. Power of resistance; sureness; fastness.

Our castle's strength

Will laugh a siege to scorn.

5. Support; security; that which supports.

Bereave me not thy aid,

Thy counsel in this uttermost distress,

My only strength and stay.

6. Power of mind; force of any mental faculty.

Aristotle's large views, acuteness and penetration of thought, and strength of judgement, few have equalled.

We enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense, and the most exquisite taste of politeness.

We, like friendly colours, found our hearts unite,

And each from each contract new strength and light.

7. Spirit; animation.

Methinks I feel new strength within me rise,

Wings growing, and dominion given.

Adam and first matron Eve

Had ended now their orisons, and found

Strength adde'd from above, new hope to spring

Out of despair.

8. Vigour of writing; nervous diction; force opposed to softness, in writing or painting.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know,

What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow,
And praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join.

Caracci's strength, Correggio's softer line,
Paulo's free stroke, and Titian's warmth divine.

9. Potency of liquors.

10. Fortification; fortress.

The rashness of talking should not only be retarded by the guard of our heart, but fenced in by certain strengths placed in the mouth.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

He thought

This inaccessible high strength to have seiz'd.

Milton, P. L.

Betray'd in all his strengths, the wood beset;
All instruments, all arts of ruin met.

11. Support; maintenance of power.

What they boded would be a mischief to us, you are providing shall be one of our principal strengths.

Sprat, Serm.

12. Legal force; validity; security.

13. Confidence imparted.

Certain services were due from the soldier to his captain, and from the captain to the prince, and upon the strength of such tenures, in after times, the descendants of these people and their kings did subsist and make their wars.

Davenant.

The allies, after a successful summer, are too apt, upon the strength of it, to neglect their preparations for the ensuing campaign.

Addison.

14. Armament; force; power.

What is his strength by land?

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Nor was there any other strength designed to attend about his highness than one regiment.

Clarendon.

15. Persuasive prevalence; argumentative force.

This presupposed, it may then stand very well with strength and soundness of reason, thus to answer.

Hooker.

To STRENGTH. v. a. To strengthen. Not used.

Edward's happy-order'd reign, most fertile breeds

Plenty of mighty spirits, to strength his state.

Daniel.

To STRENGTHEN. v. a. [from strength.]

1. To make strong.

2. To confirm; to establish.

Authority is by nothing so much strengthened and confirmed as by custom; for no man easily distrusts the things which he and all men have been always bred up to.

Temple.

Thee, bold Longinus! all the Nine inspire,
And bless your critic with a poet's fire:

An ardent judge, who, zealous in his trust,
With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just;

Whose own example strengthens all his laws,
And is himself that great sublime he draws.

If it were true that women were thus naturally vain and light, then how much more blamable is that education, which seems contrived to strengthen and increase this folly!

Law.

3. To animate; to fix in resolution.

Let us rise up and build: so they strengthened their hands for this work.

Neh. ii. 18.

Charge Joshua, and encourage him and strengthen him.

Deuteronomy.

4. To make to increase in power or security.

Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
With powerful policy strengthen themselves.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

They sought the strengthening of the heathen.

1 Mac. vi.

To STRENGTHEN. v. n. To grow strong.

Oh men for flattery and deceit renown'd!

Thus when y' are young ye learn it all like him,

Till, as your years increase, that strengthens too,

T' undo poor maids.

Otway, Orphan.

The disease that shall destroy at length,
Grows with his growth, and strengthens with his strength.

Pope.

STRENGTHENER. } n. s. [from strengthen]

STRENGTHNER. } by contraction strengthen-

1. That which gives strength; that which makes strong.

Garlick is a great strengthener of the stomach upon decays of appetite or indigestion.

Temple.

2. [In medicine.] Strengtheners add to the bulk and firmness of the solids: cordials are such as drive on the vital actions; but these such as confirm the stamina.

Quincy.

STRENGTHLESS. adj. [from strength.]

1. Wanting strength; deprived of strength.

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,

Unable to support this lump of clay.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

As the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life

Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire

Out of his keeper's arms.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. Wanting potency; weak. Used of liquors.

To STREW.† v. a. [The orthography of this word is doubtful: it is sometimes written strew, and sometimes strow. I have taken both: Skinner proposes strow, and Junius writes straw. Their reasons will appear in the word from which it may be derived: strawan, Goth. stroyen, Dutch; strepapian, Saxon; streuven, German; stro, Danish. Perhaps strow is best, being that which reconciles etymology with pronunciation. Dr. Johnson. — I may add the Sax. strepapian, and the Swedish stroo. Straw, as Junius writes it, and as it is often written in our translation of the Bible, is strictly conformable to the etymology, viz. to the Goth. strawan, which, as well as the Saxon verbs, Mr. H. Tooke derives from straw.]

And then with a low sail, to strike to thee. Shaks.

The interest of our kingdom is ready to strike to that of your poorest fishing-towns: it is hard you will not accept our services. Swift.

11. To be put by some sudden act or motion into any state; to break forth.

It struck on a sudden into such reputation, that it scorns any longer to sculk, but owns itself publicly. Gov. of the Tongue.

12. To STRIKE in with. To conform; to suit itself to; to join with at once.

Those who, by the prerogative of their age, should frown youth into sobriety, imitate and strike in with them, and are really vicious that they may be thought young. South.

They catch at every shadow of relief, strike in at a venture with the next companion, and, so the dead commodity be taken off, care not who be the champion. Norris.

The cares or pleasures of the world strike in with every thought.

He immediately struck in with them, but described this march to the temple with so much horror, that he shivered every joint. Addison.

13. To STRIKE out. To spread or rove; to make a sudden excursion.

In this plain was the last general rendezvous of mankind; and from thence they were broken into companies and dispersed, the several successive generations, like the waves of the sea, over-reaching one another, and striking out farther and farther upon the land. Burnet, Theology.

When a great man strikes out into a sudden irregularity, he needs not question the respect of a retinue. Collier.

STRIKE.† n. s. A bushel; a dry measure of capacity; four pecks.

Wing, cartnave, and bushel, peck, strike, ready at hand. Tusser, Husbandry.

What dowry has she?—Some two hundred bottles,
And twenty strike of oats. Beaumont, and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

He thought with his staff to have struck the striker. Sandys.

The striker must be dense, and in its best velocity. Digby.

STRIKING.† part. adj. [from strike.] Affecting; surprising.

Though colour be the lowest of all the constituent parts of beauty, yet it is vulgarly the most striking. Spence, Crito.

STRIKINGLY.* adv. [from striking.] So as to affect or surprise.

The force of many strikingly poetical passages has been weakened or unperceived, because their origin was unknown, unexplored, or misunderstood. Warton, Pref. to Milton's Sm. Poems.

STRIKINGNESS.* n. s. [from striking.] The power of affecting or surprising.

STRING. n. s. [rtpung, Saxon; streng, German and Danish; stringhe, Dutch; stringo, Lat.]

1. A slender rope; a small cord; any slender and flexible band.

Any lower bullet hanging upon the other above it, must be conceived, as if the weight of it were in that point where its string touches the upper. Wilkins, Dedalus.

2. A riband.

Round Ormond's knee thou tiest the mystick string,
That makes the knight companion to the king. Prior.

3. A thread on which any things are filed.

Their priests pray by their beads, having a string with a hundred of nutshells upon it; and the repeating of certain words with them they account meritorious. Silllingfleet.

4. Any set of things filed on a line.

I have caught two of these dark undermining vermin, and intend to make a string of them, in order to hang them up in one of my papers. Addison, Spect.

5. The chord of a musical instrument.

Thus when two brethren strings are set alike,
To move them both, but one of them we strike.
Coutley.

The string that jars
When rudely touch'd, ungrateful to the sense,
With pleasure feels the master's flying fingers,
Swells into harmony, and charms the hearers.
Rouze.

By the appearance they make in marble, there is not one string-instrument that seems comparable to our violins.
Addison.

6. A small fibre.
Duckweed putteth forth a little string into the water, from the bottom. Bacon.
In pulling broom up, the least strings left behind will grow. Mortimer.

The most piteous tale, which in recounting,
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
The string of his tongue was loosed.
St. Mark, vii. 35.

8. The nerve or line of the bow.
The wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrows upon the string. Ps. xi. 2.
Th' impetuous arrow whizzes on the wing,
Sounds the tough horn, and twangs the quiv'ring string. Pope.

9. Any concatenation or series: as, a string of propositions.
13. To have two STRINGS to the bow. To have two views or two expedients; to have double advantage, or double security.
No lover has that power
To enforce a desperate amour,
As he that has two strings to 's bow,
And burns for love and money too. Hudibras.

To STRING. v. a. pret. strung, part. pass.
strung. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with strings.
Has not wise nature strung the legs and feet
With firmest nerves, design'd to walk the street?
Gay.

2. To put a stringed instrument in tune.
Here the muse so oft her harp has strung,
That not a mountain rears its head unsung.
Addison.

3. To file on a string.
Men of great learning or genius are too full to be exact; and therefore chuse to throw down their pearls in heaps before the reader, rather than be at the pains of stringing them. Spectator.

4. To make tense.
Toil strung the nerves and purified the blood.
Dryden.

STRINGED. adj. [from string.] Having strings; produced by strings.
Praise him with stringed instruments and organs.
Psalms.

Divinely warbled voice,
Answering the stringed noise,
As all their souls in blissful rapture took.
Milton, Ode.

STRINGENT. † adj. [stringens, Lat.] Binding; contracting.
What down doth dive
Into the straiten'd cuspids, needs must strive
With stringent bitterness, vexation.
More, Song of the South, iii. iii. 20.

The serpents twisting round their stringent folds, Inextricable tie! Thomson, Liberty, P. iv.

STRINGER.  n. s.* [from string.] One who makes strings for a bow. Obsolete.
Stringers ought more diligently to be looked upon,—than either bowyer or Fletcher.
Ascham, Twophil. B. 2.

STRINGHALT. n. s. A sudden twitching and snatching up of the hinder leg of a horse much higher than the other, or an involuntary or convulsive motion of the muscles that extend or bend the hough.

Farrier's Dict.

STRINGLESS. adj. [from string.] Having no strings.

Nothing; all is said;
His tongue is now a stringless instrument,
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

STRINGY. adj. [from string.] Fibrous; consisting of small threads; filamentous.
A plain Indian fan, made of the small stringy parts of roots spread out in a round flat form.
Grew.

By melting expensive sweats, and an obstinate flux of the belly, the stringy parts of the tendons and membranes are left unrecruited. Blackmore.

To STRIP. † v. a. [βερτῖπᾱν, Saxon, denudare; streifen, Germ. decorticare;
strypr, Icel. nudum corpus, stripadr, denudatus. Serenius.]

1. To make naked; to deprive of covering: with of before the thing taken away.

They began to strip her of her clothes when I came in among them. Sutney.
They strip Joseph out of his coat.
Gen. xxxvii. 23.

Scarce credible it is how soon they were striped and laid naked on the ground.
Hayward.

Hadst thou not committed
Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Askalon, who never did thee harm,
Then like a robber strip'st them of their robes.
Milton, S. A.

You clothe all that have no relation to you, and strip your master that gives you food. L' Etranger.

A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That strip them bare. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

He saw a beauteous maid
With hair dishevel'd, issuing through the shade, Strip of her clothes. Dryden.

He left the pillagers, to rapine bred,
Without control to strip and spoil the dead.
Dryden.

The bride was put in form to bed;
He follow'd strip. Swift.

2. To deprive; to divest.
The apostle, in exhorting men to contentment, although they have in this world no more than bare food and raiment, giveth us to understand, that those are even the lowest of things necessary; that, if we should be *strip*d of all these things, without which we might possibly be, yet these must be left.
Hooker.

Now this curious built Phæacian ship,
Returning from her convoy, I will strip
Of all her fleeting matter. Chapman.

We strip and divest ourselves of our own will,
and give ourselves entirely up to the will of God.
Duppa.

It is difficult to lead another by words into the thoughts of things, *strip*ped of those specific differences we give them. Locke.

One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease and affluence, not of one just *strip*d of all those advantages, and plunged in the deepest miseries; and now sitting naked upon a dunghill. Atterbury.

3. To rob; to plunder; to pillage: as, a thief *strip*ped the house.

That which lays a man open to an enemy, and that which strips him of a friend, equally attacks him in all those interests that are capable of being weakened by the one, and supported by the other.
South.

4. To peel; to decorticate.

If the leaves or dried stocks be *strip*ped into small straws, they arise unto amber, wax, and other electrics, no other ways than those of wheat or rye.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

5. To deprive of all.

When some fond easy fathers strip themselves before they lie down to their long sleep, and settle their whole estates upon their sons, has it not been seen that the father has been requited with beggary? South.

6. To take off covering: with off empha-tical.

He *strip*pt off his clothes. 1 Sam. xix. 24.
Logic helps us to strip off the outward disguise of things, and to behold and judge of them in their own nature. Watts.

7. To cast off. Not in use.

His unkindness,
That *strip*pt her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To her doghearted daughters: these things sting
him. Shakspeare.

8. To separate from something adhesive or connected. Not accurately used.

Amongst men who examine not scrupulously their own ideas, and strip them not from the marks men use for them, but confound them with words, there must be endless dispute. Locke.

9. To draw the after-milkings of cows.
North. Grose.

STRIP. † n. s. [probably for stripe.] A narrow shred.

A plumed fan may shade thy chalked face,
And lawny strips thy naked bosom grace.
By. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

These two apartments were hung in close mourning, and only a strip of bays round the other rooms.
Swift.

To STRIPE. v. a. [strepē, Dutch.]

1. To variegate with lines of different colours.

2. To beat; to lash.

STRIPE. n. s. [strepe, Dutch.]

1. A lineary variation of colour. This seems to be the original notion of the word.

Gardeners may have three roots among an hundred that are rare, as purple and carnation of several stripes. Bacon.

2. A shred of a different colour.

One of the most valuable trimmings of their clothes was a long stripe sowed upon the garment, called latus clavus. Arbuthnot.

3. A weal, or discoloration made by a lash or blow.

Cruelty marked him with inglorious stripes.
Thomson.

4. A blow; a lash.

A body cannot be so torn with stripes, as a mind with remembrance of wicked actions. Hayward.

To those that are yet within the reach of the stripes and reproofs of their own conscience, I would address that they would not seek to remove themselves from that wholesome discipline.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

STRIPED. part. adj. [from stripe.] Distinguished by lines of different colour.

STRIPING. † n. s. [Of uncertain etymology. Dr. Johnson.—It is probably, by an easy metathesis, from the Sax. ppitan, to shoot out. See To OUTSTRIP.]

A youth; one in the state of adolescence.
Thwart the lane,

He, with two stripings, lads, more like to run
The country base, than to commit such slaughter,
Made good the passage. Shaks. Cymb.

Now a *strip*pling cherub he appears,
Not of the prime, yet such as in his face
Youth smil'd celestial. Milton, P. L.

Compositions on any important subjects are not matters to be wrung from poor stripings, like blood out of the nose, or the plucking of untimely fruit. Milton on Education.

As when young striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court;
The wooden engine whirrs. Dryden, En.

As every particular member of the body is nourished with a several qualified juice, so children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets. Arbutnot on Aliments.

STRIPPER.† n. s. [from strip.] One that strips. Sherwood.

STRIPPINGS.* n. s. [from strip.] After-milkings. North. See the last sense of To STRIP. Grose.

STRITCHEL.* n. s. A strickle. Sherwood.
See STRICKLE.

To STRIVE. v. n. preterite strove, anciently strived; part. pass. striven.
[streven, Dutch; estriver, French.]

1. To struggle; to labour; to make an effort.

The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hooker.
Many brave young minds have, through hearing the praises and eulogies of worthy men, been stirred up to affect the like commendations, and so strive to the like deserts. Spenser.
Strive with me in your prayers to God for me.

So have I strived to preach the gospel. Rom. xv.
Was it for this that Rome's best blood he spilt,
With so much falsehood, so much guile?
Was it for this that his ambition strove
To equal Cæsar first, and after Jove? Cowley.
Our blessed Lord commands you to strive to enter in; because many will fail, who only seek to enter. Law.

These thoughts he strove to bury in expence,
Rich meats, rich wines, and vain magnificence.

2. To contest; to contend; to struggle in opposition to another: with against or with before the person opposed.

Do as adversaries do in law,
Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends.

Strive for the truth unto death. Ecclus. iv. 28.
Why dost thou strive against him?
Job, xxxiii. 13.

Charge them that they strive not about words to no profit. 2 Tim. ii. 14.

Thus does every wicked man that contemns
God; who can save or destroy him who strives with his Maker? Tillotson.

If intestine broils alarm the hive,
For two pretenders off for empire strive,
The vulgar in divided factions jar;
And murmuring sounds proclaim the civil war. Dryden.

3. To oppose by contrariety of qualities.

Now private pity strove with public hate,
Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate. Denham.

4. To vie; to be comparable to; to emulate; to contend in excellence.

Nor that sweet grove
Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspir'd
Castalian spring, might with this paradise
Of Eden strive. Milton, P. L.

STRIV'ER.† n. s. [from strive.] One who labours; one who contends.

An imperfect striver may overcome sin in some instances; and yet in that do no great matter neither, if he lies down, and goes no further.
Glanville, Sermon. p. 46.

STRIV'ING.* n. s. [from strive.] Contest.
Avoid contentions and strivings about the law.

This is warrantable conflict for trial of our faith;
so that these strivings are not a contending with superiour powers. L'Estrange.

STRIV'INGLY.* adv. [from striving.] With struggle; with contest. Huloet.

STRO'KAL. n. s. An instrument used by glass-makers. Bailey.

STROKE, or STROOK. Old preterite of strike, now commonly struck.

He, hoodwinked with kindness, least of all men knew who stroke him. Sidney.

STROKE. n. s. [from strook, the preterite of strike.]

1. A blow; a knock; a sudden act of one body upon another.

The oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beat to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes.

His white-man'd steeds that bow'd beneath the yoke,
He cheer'd to courage with a gentle stroke,
Then urg'd his fiery chariot on the foe,
And rising, shook his lance in act to throw. Dryden.

2. A hostile blow.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shaks.
He entered and won the whole kingdom of Naples, without striking a stroke. Bacon.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

I had a long design upon the ears of Curi, but the rogue would never allow me a fair stroke at them, though my penknife was ready. Swift.

3. A sudden disease or affliction.

Take this purse, thou whom the heav'n's plagues
Have humbled to all strokes. Shaks. K. Lear.
At this one stroke the man look'd dead in law:
His flatterers scamper, and his friends withdraw. Harte.

4. The sound of the clock.

What is 't o'clock? —
Upon the stroke of four. Shaks. Rich. III.

5. The touch of a pencil.

Oh, lasting as those colours may they shine!
Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line. Pope.

6. A touch; a masterly or eminent effort.

Another in my place would take it for a notable stroke of good-breeding, to compliment the reader.

The boldest strokes of poetry, when managed artfully, most delight the reader. L'Estrange.

As he purchased the first success in the present war, by forcing into the service of the confederates an army that was raised against them, he will give one of the finishing strokes to it, and help to conclude the great work. Addison.

A verdict now puts me in possession of my estate; I question not but you will give it the finishing stroke. Arbutnot.

Isidore's collection was the great and bold stroke, which in its main parts has been discovered to be an impudent forgery. Baker on Learning.

7. An effect suddenly or unexpectedly produced.

8. Power; efficacy.

These having equal authority for instruction of the young prince, and well agreeing, bare equal stroke in divers faculties. Hayward.

Perfectly opacous bodies can but reflect the incident beams, those that are diaphanous refract them too, and that refraction has such a stroke in the production of colours, generated by the tra-jection of light through drops of water, that exhibit a rainbow through divers other transparent bodies. Boyle.

He has a great stroke with the reader when he condemns any of my poems, to make the world have a better opinion of them. Dryden.

The subtle effluvia of the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation. Ray.

To STROKE. v. a. [τρᾶσαν, Saxon.]

1. To rub gently with the hand by way of kindness or endearment; to soothe.

Thus children do the silly birds they find
With stroking hurt, and too much cramming kill. Sidney.

The senior weaned, his younger shall teach,
More strooken and made of, when ought it doth aile,
More gentle ye make it for yoke or the paile. Tusser.

Thy praise or dispraise is to me alike;
One doth not stroke me, nor the other strike. B. Jonson.

He set forth a proclamation, stroaking the people with fair promises, and humouring them with in-vectives against the king and government. Bacon.
He dried the falling drops, and, yet more kind,
He strook 'd her cheeks. Dryden.

Come, let us practise death,
Stroke the grim lion till he grow familiar. Dryden.
She pluck'd the rising flow'rs, and fed
The gentle beast, and fondly strook 'd his head. Addison.

2. To rub gently in one direction. See STROKING.

STRO'KER.* n. s. [from stroke.] One who rubs gently with the hand; one who attempts to cure diseases by such application of the hand to the part affected.

Ben Jonson figuratively uses the word for a flatterer.

An eye-witness of several wonderful cures by the famous Irish stroker, Mr. Greatrix.

Thoresby to Bp. Nicholson. (1699.) Ep. Corr. i. 128.
Cures worked by Greatrix the stroker, in the memory of our fathers; and those performed at the tomb of Abbé Paris in our own!

Warburton, Sermon. 27.

STRO'KING.* n. s. [from stroke.]

1. The act of rubbing gently with the hand.

The manner of his cure in those imperfections is somewhat strange: he useth no bindings, but oils and stroakings. Wotton, Rem. p. 462.

2. The act of rubbing gently in one direction. Stroakings are the same as strip-pings, the last milk that can be drawn from a cow.

The big-udder'd cows with patience stand,
Waiting the stroakings of the damsel's hand. Gay.

To STROLL.† v. n. [τρᾶσαν, Sax. to stray. See To STRAGGLE.] To wander; to ramble; to rove; to gad idly.

She's mine, and thine, and strolling up and down.

Your wine lock'd up, your butler stroll'd abroad.

These mothers stroll, to beg sustenance for their helpless infants. Swift.

STROLL.* n. s. [from the verb.] Ramble:
a low expression; as, upon the stroll.

STRO'LLER. n. s. [from stroll.] A vagrant;
a wanderer; a vagabond.

Two brother-hermits, saints by trade,
Disguis'd in tatter'd habits, went
To a small village down in Kent;

Where, in the strollers' canting strain,
They begg'd from door to door in vain. Swift.

The men of pleasure, who never go to church, form their ideas of the clergy from a few poor strollers they often observe in the streets. Swift.

STROND. n. s. [from strand.] The beach;
the bank of the water. Obsolete.

So looks the strond, whereon the imperious flood Hath left a witness'd usurpation. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

STRONG.† adj. [τρᾶς, τρᾶς, τρᾶς, τρᾶς,
Sax. "Stranger, Icel. strenuus, rapidus, intendus; streng, Sueth. asper; strong, rigidus; consent. linguis cognatis omnibus." Serenius.]

1. Vigorous; forceful; of great ability of body.

Though gan the villain was so fierce and strong,
That nothing may sustain his furious force,
He cast him down to ground, and all along
Drew him through dirt and mire. Spenser.

The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up,
And set thee by Jove's side.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

That our oxen may be strong to labour.

Psal. cxliv. 14.

The Marsian and Sabellian race,

Strong-limb'd and stout. Dryden.

Orses the strong to greater strength must yield;
He, with Parthenius, were by Rapo kill'd.

Dryden.

2. Fortified; secure from attack.

Within Troy's strong immures

The ravish'd Helen with wanton Paris sleeps.

Shakespeare.

An army of English engaged between an army of a greater number, fresh and in vigour on the one side, and a town strong in fortification, and strong in men on the other. Bacon.

It is no matter how things are; so a man observe but the agreement of his own imaginations, and talk comfortably, it is all truth: such castles in the air will be as strong holds of truth as the demonstrations of Euclid. Locke.

3. Powerful; mighty.

While there was war between the houses of Saul and David, Abner made himself strong for Saul. 2 Sam. iii. 6.

The merchant-adventurers being a strong company, and well underset with rich men and good order, held out bravely. Bacon.

Those that are strong at sea may easily bring them to what terms they please. Addison.

The weak, by thinking themselves strong, are induced to proclaim war against that which ruins them; and the strong, by conceiting themselves weak, are thereby rendered as useless as if they really were so. South, Serm.

4. Supplied with forces. It has in this sense a very particular construction.

We say, a thousand strong; as we say,
twenty years old, or ten yards long.

When he was not six-and-twenty strong,
Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,
My father gave him welcome to the shore.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He was, at his rising from Exeter, between six and seven thousand strong. Bacon.

In Britain's lovely isle a shining throng
War in his cause, a thousand beauties strong.

Tickell.

5. Violent; forcible; impetuous.

A river of so strong a current, that it suffereth not the sea to flow up its channel. Heylin.

But her own kings she likens to his Thames,
Serenely yet strong, majestic yet sedate,
Swift without violence, without terror great. Prior.

6. Hale; healthy.

Better is the poor, being sound and strong in constitution, than a rich man afflicted in his body.

Eccles. xxx. 14.

7. Forcibly acting on the imagination.

This is one of the strongest examples of a personation that ever was. Bacon.

8. Ardent; eager; positive; zealous.

Her mother, ever strong against that match,
And firm for doctor Caius, hath appointed,
That he shall suffer her away. Shakespeare.

In choice of committees for ripening business for the council, it is better to chuse indifferent persons than to make an indifferency, by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon.

The knight is a much stronger Tory in the country than in town, which is necessary for the keeping up his interest. Addison.

9. Full; having any quality in a great degree; affecting the sight forcibly.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper;
but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness or from white and black, that is, a grey or dun, or russet brown. Newton, Opt.

Thus shall there be made two bows of colours, an interior and stronger, by one reflexion in the drops, and an exterior and fainter by two; for the light becomes fainter by every reflexion.

Newton, Opt.

10. Potent; intoxicating.

Get strong beer to rub your horses' heels. Swift.

11. Having a deep tincture; affecting the taste forcibly.

Many of their propositions savour very strong of the old leaven of innovations. King Charles.

12. Affecting the smell powerfully.

The prince of Cambay's daily food

Is asps, and basilisk, and toad;

Which makes him have so strong a breath,

Each night he stinks a queen to death. Hudibras.

Add with Cecropian thyme strong scented centuary. Dryden.

The heat of a human body, as it grows more intense, makes the urine smell more strong.

Arbutnot.

13. Hard of digestion; not easily nutri-mental.

Strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age. Hebrews.

14. Furnished with abilities for any thing.
I was stronger in prophecy than in criticism.

Dryden.

15. Valid; confirmed.

In process of time, an ungodly custom grown strong, was kept as a law. Wisd. xiv. 16.

16. Violent; vehement.

In the days of his flesh he offered up prayers, with strong crying and tears. Heb. v. 7.

STRUDE, or Strode. n. s. A stock of breeding mares. Bailey.

To STRUGGLE. † v. n. [Of uncertain etymology. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the Su. Goth. stragla. See Spiegel's Su. Goth. Gloss. in voice, where our word is noticed, as well as the German straucheln. Our old word is "strokellinge, and strogelyn, collectatio." Prompt. Parv.]

1. To labour; to act with effort.

2. To strive; to contend; to contest.

In the time of Henry VIII. differences of religion tore the nation into two mighty factions, and, under the name of Papist and Protestant, struggled in her bowels with many various events. Temple.

I repeat, like some despairing wretch,
That boldly plunges in the frightful deep,
Then pants and struggles with the whirling waves,
And catches every slender reed to save him. Smith.

3. To labour in difficulties; to be in agonies or distress.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden.
'Tis wisdom to beware
And better shun the bait, than struggle in the snare. Dryden.

If men struggle through as many troubles to be miserable as to be happy, my readers may be persuaded to be good. Spectator.

STRUGGLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Labour; effort.

2. Contest; contention.

When, in the division of parties, men only strove for the first place in the prince's favour, an honest man might look upon the struggle with indifference. Addison.

It began and ended without any of those unnatural struggles for the chair, which have disturbed the peace of this great city. Atterbury.

3. Agony; tumultuous distress.

STRUGGLER.* n. s. [from struggle.] One who contends; a striver.

How to treat them when strumous, scirrhus, or cancerous. Wiseman.

A glandulous consumption, such as does not affect the lungs with a rupture of its vessels, and coughing up blood, is produced by strumous or scrophulous humours. Blackmore.

STRUMPET. † n. s. [of doubtful original.

"Stropo, vieux mot, palliardise: stuprum, Lat." Trevous. Dr. Johnson. — The old French word is strupe, which denotes whoredom. See Roquefort, Gloss. And hence strupet might be formed, and by an easy corruption strumpet. The word is old in our language: it occurs in addition to the name of a woman, or by way of description, in a return made by a jury in the sixth year of king Henry the Fifth. See Cowel. Mr. Tooke refers, as the Etym. Dict. of 1691 had before, to a Dutch word, applying in the way of contempt for the name. Wachter notices strune as having been used, in the dialect of Lower Saxony, for a prostitute. See his Germ. Dict. in V. STRUNZE.] A whore; a prostitute.

Ne'er could the strumpet,
With all her double vigour, art, and nature,
Once stir my temper; but that virtuous maid Subdues me quite. Shakspeare, Mens. for Mens.
If to preserve this vessel for my lord
From any other foul, unlawful touch,
Be not to be a strumpet, I am none.

Shakspeare, Othello.
Common fame is as false and impudent as a common strumpet. L'Estrange.

Honour had his due;
Before the holy priest my vows were tied;
So I came not a strumpet, but a bride. Dryden.

STRUMPET.* adj. Like a strumpet; false; inconstant.

How like a younker, or a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind!
How like a prodigal doth she return,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind!
Shakspeare.

To STRUMPET. † v. a. To make a whore; to debauch.

If we two be one, and thou play false,
I do digest the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpeted by the contagion. Shakspeare.
Gilded honour shamefully misplac'd,
And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted. Shakspeare, Sonnet. 66.

Oh! never may
Fair law's white reverend name be strumpeted,
To warrant thefts! Donne, Poems, p. 139.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

STUB. † n. s. [reeb, ryb, Saxon; stubbe, Suth. from stýbba, (or stúbba), to lop, to cut off. Serenius. Stobbe is the Teut. and also our word in some parts of the north.]

1. A thick short stock left when the rest is cut off.

Dametas guided the horses so ill, that the wheel coming over a great stub of a tree, overturned the coach. Sidney.

All about, old stocks and stubs of trees, Whereon nor fruit nor leaf was ever seen, Did hang upon the ragged rocky knees. Spenser.

To buy at the stub is the best for the buyer, More timely provision, the cheaper is fire. Tusser. Upon cutting down of an old timber tree, the stub hath put out sometimes a tree of another kind. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

We here

Live on tough roots and stubs, to thirst inur'd, — Men to much misery and hardship born. Millon, P. R.

Prickly stubs instead of trees are found, Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old; Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

2. A log; a block.

You shall have more ado to drive our dulllest and laziest youth, our stocks and stubs, from the infinite desire of such a happy nurture, than we have now to haul our choicest wits to that asinine feast of sow-thistles and brambles. Millon on Education.

To STUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To force up; to extirpate.

His two tusks serve for fighting and feeding; by the help whereof he stubs up edible roots out of the ground, or tears off the bark of trees. Grew, Mus.

The other tree was griev'd, Grew scrubby, dry'd a-top, was stunted; So the next parson stubb'd and burnt it. Swift.

STUBBED. † adj. [from stub.]

Dr. Colbatch's Case of Frozies, &c. (1741), p. 101.

STUD. † n. s. [rcubu, Saxon.]

1. A post; a stake. In some such meaning perhaps it is to be taken in the following passage, which I do not understand. Dr. Johnson. — It means a prop; as the Saxon word does; and as the Icel. stud, fulcrum. The passage, which Dr. Johnson means, is that from Mortimer's Husbandry. I support the meaning which I offer by the higher authorities of bishop Jeremy Taylor, and the ever-memorable John Hales of Eton. Spenser uses the word for stock or trunk.

Seest not thilke same hawthorne stудde, How bragly it begins to budde, And utter his tender head? Spenser, Shep. Cal. March.

They that build houses of clay, must every where place studs, and pieces of timber and wood to strengthen the building. Hales, Rem. p. 141.

It is a gross mistake in architecture, to think that every small stud bears the main stress and burthen of the building, which lies indeed upon the principal timbers.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 11

A barn in the country, that hath one single stud, or one height of studs to the roof, is two shillings a foot. Mortimer.

2. A nail with a large head driven for ornament; any ornamental knob or protuberance.

Handles were to add,
For which he now was making studs.

That high trees overthrew, and rocks in pieces tore. Spenser.

3. Stiff; stout.

He was not of any delicate contexture, his limbs rather sturdy than dainty. Watton.

Sturdiest oaks

Bow'd their stiff necks, loaden with stormy blasts,

Or torn up sheer. Milton, P. R.

STURGEON.† n. s. [sturgeon, old French;

sturio, tursio, Lat.] A sea-fish.

It is part of the scutellated bone of a sturgeon, being flat, of a porous or cellular constitution on one side, the cells being worn down and smooth on the other. Woodward.

STURK.† n. s. [stýrk, Saxon.] A young ox or heifer. Bailey. Thus they are still called in Scotland, Dr. Johnson says; and he might have added in many parts of England; in Warwickshire,

Cheshire, and generally throughout the north.

To STUT.† } v. n. [stottern, Germ.

To STUTTER. } the same; which Wachter derives from stoten, to stumble.

Our old word is stot: "To stoty or stammer, titubo, blatero." Prompt.

Parv.] To speak with hesitation; to stammer. Huloet.

She spake somewhat thicke,

Her fellowe did stammer and stut.

But she was a foule slut. Skelton, Poems, p. 133.

Divers stut: the cause is the refrigeration of the tongue, whereby it is less apt to move; and therefore naturals stut. Bacon.

STUTTER.† } n. s. [from stut.] One that stutters. }

Many stutters are very choleric, choler inducing a dryness in the tongue. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Stutterers use to stammer more when the wind is in that hole. Howell, Lett. i. i. 27.

STUTTINGLY.* } adv. [from the verb.]

STUTTERINGLY. } With stammering or hesitating speech. Huloet, and Barret.

STY.† n. s. [stige, Sax. stia, Icel.]

1. A cabin to keep hogs in.

Tell Richmond,

That in the sty of this most bloody boar

My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

When her hogs had miss'd their way,

The untoward creatures to the sty I drove,

And whistled all the way. Gay.

May thy black pigs lie warm in little sty,

And have no thought to grieve them till they die. King.

2. Any place of bestial debauchery.

[They] all their friends and native home forget,

To roll with pleasure in a sensual sty. Milton, Comus.

With what ease

Might'st thou expel this monster from his throne,

Now made a sty. Milton, P. R.

3. [Stigen, Sax. probably from stigan, to grow up. See Etym. Dict. 1691.]

A humour in the eyelid: sometimes written stian.

To STY.† v. a. [from the noun; Saxon, stigean.] To shut up in a sty.

Here you sty me

In this hard rock, while you do keep from me

The rest of the island. Shakespeare, Tempest.

To STY.† v. n. [stigan, Sax. steigan, Goth.

to climb.] To soar; to ascend; to climb.

He ran before, and stighed into a sycamore tree.

Wicliffe, St. Luke, xix.

He [Christ] styed up into heaven.

Lib. Fest. fol. 39. b.

To climb aloft, and others to excell;

That was ambition, rash desire to stye.

Spenser, F. G.

From this lower tract he dar'd to stie

Up to the cloudes. Spenser, Muopotmos.

STYCA.* n. s. [stica, stýca, Sax. from sticca, a small part.] A copper Saxon coin of the lowest value.

They had copper stycas also smaller than the penny, having the king's name on one side, and coiner's on the other, eight of which made a penny. Leake.

STYCIAN. adj. [stygicus, Latin.] Hellish; infernal; pertaining to Styx, one of the poetical rivers of hell.

At that so sudden blaze, the Stygian throng

STYLE.† n. s. [stylus, Lat.]

1. Manner of writing with regard to language.

Happy

That can translate the stubbornness of fortune

Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shaks.

Their beauty I will rather leave to poets, than venture upon so tender and nice a subject with my severer style. More.

Proper words in proper places make the true definition of a style. Swift.

Let some lord but own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens, how the style refines! Pope.

2. Manner of speaking appropriate to particular characters.

No style is held for base, where love well named is.

Sidney.

There was never yet philosopher,
That could endure the toothach patiently,
However they have writ the style of gods,
And make a pish at chance and sufferance.

Shakspeare.

3. Mode of painting.

The great stile stands alone, and does not require, perhaps does not as well admit, any addition from inferior beauties. The ornamental stile also possesses its own peculiar merit: however, though the union of the two may make a sort of composite style, yet that style is likely to be more imperfect than either of those which go to its composition.

Reynolds.

4. It is likewise applied to music.

5. Title; appellation.

Ford 's a knave, and I will aggravate his style;
thou shalt know him for knave and cuckold.

Shakspeare.

The king gave them in his commission the style and appellation which belonged to them. Clarendon.

O virgin! or what other name you bear
Above that style, O more than mortal fair!
Let not an humble suppliant sue in vain.

Dryden, Æn.

Propitious hear our prayer,
Whether the style of Titan please thee more,
Whose purple rays th' Achæmenes adore.

Pope, Statius.

6. Course of writing. Unusual.

While his thoughts the ling'ring day beguile,
To gentle Arcite let us turn our style. Dryden.

7. STYLE of Court, is properly the practice observed by any court in its way of proceeding.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

8. A pointed iron used anciently in writing on tables of wax.

When writing began to be common on tables of wood, covered over with coloured wax, men made use of a sort of bodkin, made of iron, or brass, or bone; which in Latin is called stylus: — As to the form of the style, it was made sharp like a pointed needle at one end, to write withal; and the other end blunt and broad, to scratch out what was written, and not approved of, to be amended; so that "verte re stylum," i. e. to turn the style, signifies, in Latin, to blot out.

Massey, Orig. of Letters, p. 64.

9. Any thing with a sharp point, as a graver; the pin of a dial.

Placing two styles or needles of the same steel, touched with the same lodestone, when the one is removed but half a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillars. Brown.

10. The stalk which rises from amid the leaves of a flower.

Style is the middle prominent part of the flower of a plant, which adheres to the fruit or seed: 'tis usually slender and long, whence it has its name.

Quincy.

The figure of the flower-leaves, stamina, apices, style and seed-vessel.

Ray.

TO STYLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To call;

to term; to name.

The chancellor of the exchequer they had no mind should be styled a knight. Clarendon.

Err not that so shall end

The strife which thou call'st evil, but we style

The strife of glory. Milton, P. L.

Fortune's gifts, my actions

May stile their own rewards. Denham, Sophy.

Whoever backs his tenets with authorities, thinks he ought to carry the cause, and is ready to stile it impudence in any one who shall stand out. Locke.

His conduct might have made him stil'd

A father, and the nymph his child. Swift.

STYPTICAL.† adj. [στυπτικός; stypticque, styptick.] French. This is usually, though erroneously, written stiptick.] The same as astringent; but generally expresses the most efficacious sort of astringents, or those which are applied to stop hæmorrhages.

There is a sour styptic salt diffused through the earth, which passing a concoction in plants, becometh milder. Brown.

From spirit of salt, carefully dephlegmed and removed into lower glasses, having gently abstracted the whole, there remained in the bottom and neck of their retort a great quantity of a certain dry and styptical substance, mostly of a yellowish colour. Boyle.

Fruits of trees and shrubs contain phlegm, oil, and an essential salt, by which they are sharp, sweet, sour, or styptic. Arbutnot on Aliments.

STYPTICITY.† n. s. [stypticité, old French.]

The power of staunching blood.

Cathartics of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their stypticity, and mix with all animal acids. Floyer.

STYPTICK.* n. s. An astringent medicine; a medicine applied to stop hæmorrhages.

In an effusion of blood, having drossils ready dipt in the royal styptic, we applied them. Wisman, Surgery.

TO STY'THY.† v. a. See TO STITHY.

TO SUADE.* v. a. [suader, old French; suadeo, Lat.] To persuade. Not in use.

Flee then ill-swading pleasure's baits untrue.

Grimoald, in Tottel's Songs, &c. (1557.)

TO SUAGE.* v. a. To assuage. See TO SWAGE.

Suage the tempestes. Bp. Fisher, Ps. 18.

SUA'SIBLE. adj. [from suadeo, Lat.] Easy to be persuaded.

SUA'SION.* n. s. [suasion, old Fr. suasio, Lat.] Persuasion; enticement.

But it [temptation] is devilish, when it is either by suasion unto that which is evil; — or with a design to entrap or draw any into danger.

Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 123.

Without, or in concurrence with, such moral suasions. Dr. Wallis, Two Serms. p. 38.

Mere petition, or precarious suasion.

South, Sermon ix. 174.

SUA'SIVE. adj. [from suadeo, Lat.] Having power to persuade.

It had the passions in perfect subjection; and, though its command over them was but suasive and political, yet it had the force of absolute and despotic. South, Sermon i. 55.

SUA'SORY.† adj. [suasorius, Lat. suasoire, Fr.] Having tendency to persuade.

There is a suasory or enticing temptation, that inclines the will and affections to close with what is presented to them. Bp. Hopkins, Expos. p. 123.

SUA'VITY.† n. s. [suavitè, Fr. suavitatis, Latin.]

1. Sweetness to the senses.

She desired them for rarity, pulchritude, and suavity. Brown.

Mild-smiling Cupid's there,

With lively looks, and amorous suavity.

More, Philos. Poems, (1647,) p. 297.

2. Sweetness to the mind.

That goes no farther than to some suavities and pleasant fancies within ourselves.

Glanville, Sermon. p. 55.

SUB, in composition, signifies a subordinate degree.

SUBA'CID. adj. [sub and acidus, Lat.] Sour in a small degree.

The juice of the stem is like the chyle in the animal body, not sufficiently concocted by circulation, and is commonly subacid in all plants.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

SUBA'CRID. adj. [sub and acrid.] Sharp and pungent in a small degree.

The green choler of a cow tasted sweet, bitter, subacid, or a little pungent, and turned syrup of violets green. Floyer.

TO SUBA'CT.† v. a. [subactus, Lat.] To reduce; to subdue.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the consort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

The meek spirit is incurious, and so thoroughly subacted, that he takes his load from God, as the camel from his master, upon his knees.

Bp. Hall, Of Content. § 19.

SUBA'CTION. n. s. [subactus, Lat.] The act of reducing to any state, as of mixing two bodies completely, or beating any thing to a very small powder.

There are of concoction two periods: the one assimilation, or absolute conversion and subaction; the other maturation; whereof the former is most conspicuous in living creatures, in which there is an absolute conversion and assimilation of the nourishment into the body. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

SUBALTERN.† adj. [subalterne, Fr.] Inferiour; subordinate; what in different respects is both superiour and inferiour. It is used in the army of all officers below a captain.

One should be the principal officer, and the other but special and subaltern.

Bacon on the Union of Engl. and Scotland. One, while a subaltern officer, was every day complaining against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, after he received his commission for a regiment, he confessed the spirit of colonelship was coming fast upon him, and it daily increased to his death. Swift.

This sort of universal ideas, which may either be considered as a genus or species, is called subaltern. Watts.

SU'BALTERN.* n. s. A subaltern officer.

Love's subalterns, a duteous band,

Like watchmen round their chief appear;

Each had his lantern in his hand,

And Venus, mask'd, brought up the rear. Prior.

There had like to have been a duel between two subalterns upon a dispute which should be governor of Portsmouth. Addison.

SUBALTE'RNATE.† adj. [subalternus, Lat.]

1. Succeeding by turns. Dict.

2. Subordinate. Mason.

A man may retain well, and with a good conscience, two offices, or two judicial places, if they be subalternate or subordinate one to the other.

Hooker, Fab. of the Ch. (1604,) p. 78.

Together with all their subalternate and several kinds.

Evelyn, Introd. § 4.

SUBALTERNA'TION.* n. s. [from subalternate.]

1. Act of succeeding by course. Bullokar.

2. State of inferiority; state of being in subjection to another.

Woman was created for man's sake to be his helper, in regard to the having and bringing up of children, whereunto it was not possible they could concur, unless there were subalternation between them, which subalternation is naturally grounded upon inequality, because things equal in every respect are never willingly directed one by another.

Hooker, Eccl. Pol. v. § 73.

SUBA'QUEOUS.* adj. [sub and aqua, Lat.]

Lying under water.

All plants, except the subaqueous, grow in a mixed earth, moistened with rain and dew, and exposed to the atmosphere.

Kirwan on Manures, p. 25.

SUBARRATION.* n. s. [low Lat. subarrare, "arrhabone uxorem sibi desponsare." Du Cange.] The ancient custom of betrothing.

In the old manual for the use of Salisbury, before the minister proceeds to the marriage, he is directed to ask the woman's dowry, viz. the tokens of spousage; and by these tokens of spousage are to be understood rings, or money, or some other things to be given to the woman by the man; which said giving is called subarration, (i. e. wedding or covenanting), especially when it is done by the giving of a ring.

Wheatley on the Comm. Pr. ch. 10. § 5.

SUBASTRINGENT. adj. [sub and astringent.] Astringent in a small degree.

SUBBEADLE. n. s. [sub and beadle.] An under beadle.

They ought not to execute those precepts by simple messengers, or subbeadles, but in their own persons.

SUBCELESTIAL. adj. [sub and celestial.] Placed beneath the heavens.

The most refined glories of subcelestial excellencies are but more faint resemblances of these.

SUBCHANTER. † n. s. [sub and chanter; succentor, Lat.] The deputy of the precentor in a cathedral.

That Holy, Holy, Holy, which they cry,
That are sub-chanters of Heaven's harmony.

Davies, Wit's Pilgr. sign. X. 3.

SUBCLAVIAN. adj. [sub and clavus, Latin.] Applied to any thing under the armpit or shoulder, whether artery, nerve, vein, or muscle.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet, by the subclavian division, doth equidistantly communicate its activity into either arm.

The chyle first mixeth with the blood in the subclavian vein, and enters with it into the heart, where it is very imperfectly mixed, there being no mechanism nor fermentation to convert it into blood, which is effected by the lungs.

SUBCOMMITTEE.* n. s. [sub and committee.] A subordinate committee.

Their sequestrators and subcommittees [were] men for the most part of insatiable hands.

SUBCONSTELLATION. n. s. [sub and constellation.] A subordinate or secondary constellation.

As to the picture of the seven stars, if thereby be meant the Pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, with what congruity they are described in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover.

SUBCONTRACTED. part. adj. [sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.

Your claim,
I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
And I her husband contradict your banes.

SUBCONTRARY. adj. [sub and contrary.] Contrary in an inferior degree.

If two particular propositions differ in quality, they are subcontraries: as, some vine is a tree; some vine is not a tree. These may be both true together, but they can never be both false.

SUBCUTANEOUS. adj. [sub and cutaneous.] Lying under the skin.

SUBDE'ACON. † n. s. [subdiaconus, Lat.]

In the Romish church they have a subdeacon, who is the deacon's servant.

The tradition of the eastern churches is otherwise than that of the Roman church: for their priests, deacons, or subdeacons are married.

He was admitted to the inferior order of accolite on the 5th of December, 1361; to the order of subdeacon, a superior and holy order in the church of Rome's account, on the 12th of March following.

SUBDEACONRY.* n. s. The Romish or SUBDEACONSHIP. † der and office of a subdeacon.

Ye come to be promoted here to the holy order of subdeaconry.

We have no need of subdeaconship, more than the churches in the apostles' times; and in truth those whom we call clerks, and sextons, perform what is necessary in this behalf.

SUBDE'AN. n. s. [subdecanus, Lat.] The viceregent of a dean.

Whenever the dean and chapter confirm any act, that such confirmation may be valid, the dean must join in person, and not in the person of a deputy or subdean only.

SUBDEANERY.* n. s. The rank and office of subdean.

The subdeanery of York, founded anno 1229, has the impropriation of Preston in Holderness.

SUBDECU'PLE. adj. [sub and decuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of ten.

SUBDERISORIOUS. adj. [sub and derisor, Lat.] Scoffing or ridiculing with tenderness and delicacy. Not used.

This subderisorous mirth is far from giving any offence to us: it is rather a pleasant condiment of our conversation.

SUBDITI'IOUS. adj. [subditiuus, Latin.] Put secretly in the place of something else.

To SUBDIVERSIFY. v. a. [sub and diversify.] To diversify again what is already diversified.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into arras; and these variously subdiversified according to the fancy of the artificer.

To SUBDIVIDE. v. a. [subdiviser, French; sub and divide.] To divide a part into yet more parts.

In the rise of eight, in tones, there be two becmols, or half notes; so as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the stops of a lute, it maketh the number thirteen.

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, soon after Antonius and Octavianus brake and subdivided.

The glad father glories in his child,
When he can subdivide a fraction.
When the progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others, in time their descendants lost the primitive rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity.

SUBDIVISION. n. s. [subdivision, French; from subdiv.]

1. The act of subdividing.
When any of the parts of any idea are farther divided, in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a subdivision; as when a year is divided into months, each month into days, and each day into hours, which may be farther subdivided into minutes and seconds.

2. The parts distinguished by a second division.

How can we see such a multitude of souls cast under so many subdivisions of misery, without reflecting on the absurdity of a government that sacrifices the happiness of so many reasonable beings to the glory of one?

In the decimal table the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit.

SUBDOLOUS. † adj. [subdolos, Lat.] Cunning; subtle; sly.

Subdolos and dishonest actions.

Illusive simulations, and subdolos artifices.

SUBDU'ABLE.* adj. [from subdue.] That may be subdued.

He hath indeed confessed in a certain place, that he had a natural touch of enthusiasm in his complexion; but such as (he thanks God) was ever governable enough; and which he had found at length perfectly subduable.

SUBDU'AL.* n. s. [from subdue.] The act of subduing.

Good is not only produced by the subdual of the passions, but by the turbulent exercise of them.

To SUBDU'CE. † v. a. [subduco, subductus, Latin.]

1. To withdraw; to take away.

He doth not always subduce his Spirit with his visible presence; but his very outward withdrawing is worthy of our sighs, worthy of our tears.

Our Master is not subduced, but risen.

Never was the earth so peevish, as to forbid the sun when it would shine on it, or to slink away, or subduce itself from its rays.

Or nature fail'd in me, and left some part

Not proof enough such object to sustain;
Or from my side subducting, took perhaps
More than enough.

2. To substract by arithmetical operation.

Take the other operation of arithmetic, subduction: if out of that supposed infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before, and yet still the quotient must be infinite.

From the opposite sides equal quantities are subducted.

SUBDUCTION. † n. s. [from subduct.]

1. The act of taking away.

O God, thine arm is strong and mighty; all thy creatures rest themselves upon that, and are comfortably sustained. O that we were not more capable of distrust, than thine omnipotent hand is of weariness and subduction!

Possibly the Divine Beneficence subducting that influence which it communicated from the time of their first creation, they were kept in a state of immortality till that moment of the subduction.

2. Arithmetical substraction.

Suppose we take the other operation of arithmetic, subduction: if out of that infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before that subduction, and yet still the quotient be infinite.

To SUBDU'E. v. a. [from subdo, or subjugo, Latin.]

1. To crush; to oppress; to sink; to overpower.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters.

Shakspeare.

Them that rose up against me, hast thou subdued under me. 2 Sam. xxii. 40.

If aught were worthy to subdue
The soul of man. Milton, P. L.

2. To conquer; to reduce under a new dominion.

Be fruitful, and replenish the earth, and subdue
it. Gen. i. 28.

Augustus Cæsar subdued Egypt to the Roman empire. Peacham.

To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils. Milton.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. Sprat.

3. To tame; to subact; to break.

Nor is 't unwholesome to subdue the land
By often exercise; and where before
You broke the earth, again to plow. May, Virgil.

SUBDU'EMENT. n. s. [from subdue.] Conquest. A word not used, nor worthy to be used.

I have seen thee,
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Bravely despising forfeits and subduements.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

SUBDU'ER. n. s. [from subdue.] Conquerour; tamer.

Great God of might, that reigneth in the mind,
And all the body to thy hest dost frame;
Victor of gods, subduer of mankind,
That dost the lions and fell tigers tame,
Who can express the glory of thy might? Spenser.

Their curious eye
Discerns their great subduer's awful mien
And corresponding features fair. Philips.
Figs are great subduers of acrimony, useful in hoarseness and coughs, and extremely emollient.
Arbutnot.

SUBDU'PLE. } adj. [subduple, Fr. sub
SUBDUPLICATION. } and duplus, Latin.]
Containing one part of two.

As one of them pulleys doth abate half of that heaviness which the weight hath in itself, and cause the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, so two of them do abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquaduple proportion, and three a subseptuple. Wilkins, Math. Magic.

The motion generated by the forces in the whole passage of the body or thing through that space, shall be in a subduplicate proportion of the forces.
Newton, Opt.

SUBDU'SK.* adj. [subfuscus, Lat.] Of a dark brown colour.

The Portuguese's complexion was a little upon the subfusc. Tatler, No. 260.

O'er whose quiescent walls
Arachne's unmoletsted care has drawn Curtains subfusc. Shenstone, Eoon. P. iii.

SUBJACENT.† adj. [subjacent, old French; subjacens, Latin.] Lying under.

The superficial parts of mountains are washed away by rains, and borne down upon the subjacent plains. Woodward.

TO SUBJEC'T. v. a. [subjectus, Latin.]

1. To put under.

Down the cliff as fast
To the subjected plain. Milton, P. L.
The medal bears each form and name:
In one short view, subjected to our eye,
Gods, emperors, heroes, sages, beauties lie. Pope.

2. To reduce to submission; to make subordinate; to make submissive.

Think not, young warriors, your diminish'd name

Shall lose of lustre, by subjecting rage
To the cool dictates of experienc'd age. Dryden.

3. To enslave; to make obnoxious.

I live on bread like you, feel want like you,
Taste grief, need friends, like you: subjected thus,
How can you say to me, I am a king?

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

I see thee, in that fatal hour,
Subjected to the victor's cruel power,
Led hence a slave. Dryden.

The blind will always be led by those that see, or fall into the ditch: and he is the most subjected,
the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding.
Locke.

4. To expose; to make liable.

If the vessels yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniences of an erroneous circulation.
Arbutnot.

5. To submit; to make accountable.

God is not bound to subject his ways of operation to the scrutiny of our thoughts, and confine himself to do nothing but what we must comprehend. Locke.

6. To make subservient.

[He] subjected to man's service angel-wings.
Milton, P. L.

SUBJECT.† adj. [subject, old Fr. subjectus,
Lat.]

1. Placed or situated under.

Long he them bore above the subject plaine.
Spenser, F. Q.

Th' eastern tower,
Whose height commands, as subject, all the vale,
To see the fight. Shaks. Tr. and Cress.

2. Living under the dominion of another.

Esau was never subject to Jacob, but founded a distinct people and government, and was himself prince over them. Locke.

Christ, since his incarnation, has been subject to the Father, and will be so also, in his human capacity, after he has delivered up his mediatorial kingdom. Waterland.

3. Exposed; liable; obnoxious.

Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;
And he the noble image of my youth
Is overspread with them. Shakspeare.

All human things are subject to decay,
And when fate summons monarchs must obey.
Dryden.

4. Being that on which any action operates, whether intellectual or material.

I enter into the subject matter of my discourse.
Dryden.

SUBJECT.† n. s. [subject, French. Dr. Johnson.—From the old Fr. subject, subject, subgit. In a proclamation of Rich. III.

among the Paston Letters, we may see,
as Mr. Chalmers has observed, subjetts, and subjetts; and in the Will of Hen.

VII. subiects. In the 28 Edw. III., and throughout the Rolls of Parliament, we may observe Fr. subgits, which is the true origin of the Engl. subject, and not Fr. subjet, as Johnson supposes. See SUBDITIS in Chalmers's Gloss. Sir D.
Lyndsay's Works.]

1. One who lives under the dominion of another: opposed to governor.

Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Never subject long'd to be a king,
As I do long and wish to be a subject.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Those I call subjects which are governed by the ordinary laws and magistrates of the sovereign.
Davies.

We must understand and confess a king to be a father; a subject to be a son; and therefore honour to be by nature most due from the natural subject to the natural king. Holyday.

The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it, human laws require it. Swift.

Were subjects so but only by their choice,
And not from birth did forc'd dominion take,
Our prince alone would have the publick voice.
Dryden.

Heroick kings, whose high perfections have made them awful to their subjects, can struggle with and subdue the corruption of the times.
Davenant.

2. That on which any operation, either mental or material, is performed.
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn, and near approaches
The subject of our watch. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

This subject for heroick song pleads'd me.
Milton, P. L.

Here he would have us fix our thoughts; nor are they too dry a subject for our contemplation.
Dec. of Chr. Piety.

I will not venture on so nice a subject with my severe style. More.

Make choice of a subject beautiful and noble,
which being capable of all the graces that colours, and elegance of design, can give, shall afford a perfect art, an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate. Dryden.

The subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied.
Watts, Logick.

My real design is, that of publishing your praises to the world; not upon the subject of your noble birth. Swift.

3. That in which any thing inheres or exists.

Anger is certainly a kind of baseness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects in whom it reigns, children, women, old folks, sick folks.
Bacon.

4. [In Grammar.] The nominative case to a verb is called by Grammarians the subject of the verb. Clarke, Lat. Gram.

SUBJECTION. n. s. [from subject.]

1. The act of subduing.

After the conquest of the kingdom, and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who there were,
that, fighting against the king, had saved themselves by flight. Hale.

2. [Subjection, old Fr.] The state of being under government.

Because the subjection of the body to the will is by natural necessity, the subjection of the will unto God voluntary; we therefore stand in need of direction after what sort our wills and desires may be rightly conformed to his. Hooker.

How hard it is now for him to frame himself to subjection, that, having once set before his eyes the hope of a kingdom, hath found encouragement.
Spenser.

Both in subjection now to sensual appetite.
Milton, P. L.

SUBJECTIVE.† adj. [from subject.]

1. Relating not to the object, but the subject.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective: objective is when the proposition is certainly true in itself;
and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. Watts.

2. Testifying subjection.

What eye can look, through clear love's spectacle,
On virtue's majesty that shines in beauty,
But, as to nature's divin'st miracle,
Performs not to it all subjective duty?

Davies, Wü's Pilgrimage, sign. D. 2.

SUBJECTIVELY.* adv. [from subjective.]
In relation to the subject.

The name of God, taken subjectively, is to be understood of Christ. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

SUBINDICATION.* n. s. [subindico, low Lat.] Signification; the act of making known by signs.

The types of Christ served to the subindication and shadowing of heavenly things.

Barrow, vol. ii. S. 19.

To SUBINDUCE.* v. a. [sub and induce.]

To insinuate; to offer indirectly.

Our innovators by this artifice do alter our settled doctrines; nay, they do subinduce points repugnant.

Sir E. Dering's Speeches in Parl. p. 14.

SUBINGRESS'ION. n. s. [sub and ingressus, Lat.] Secret entrance.

The pressure of the ambient air is strengthened upon the accession of the air sucked out; which forceth the neighbouring air to a violent subingression of its parts.

Boyle.

To SUBJOIN. v. a. [sub and joindre, Fr.; subjungo, Latin.] To add at the end; to add afterwards.

He makes an excuse from ignorance, the only thing that could take away the fault; namely, that he knew not that he was the high-priest, and subjoins a reason.

South.

SUBITANE'OUS.† adj. [subitaneus, Latin.] Sudden; hasty.

Bullockar.

SUBITANY.* adj. [subitaneus, Latin.] Hasty; subitaneous.

This which I have now commented is very subitany, and I fear confused.

Hales, Lett. (in 1630), Rem. p. 290.

To SUBJUGATE. v. a. [subjuguer, Fr. subjugo, Latin.] To conquer; to subdue; to bring under dominion by force.

O fav'rite virgin, that hast warm'd the breast,
Whose sov'reign dictates subjugate the east!

Prior.

He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal.

Baker.

SUBJUGA'TION.† n. s. [subjugation, Fr. Cotgrave.] The act of subduing.

This was the condition of the learned part of the world, after their subjugation by the Turks.

Hale.

SUBJUNCTION. n. s. [from subjungo, Lat.] The state of being subjoined; the act of subjoining.

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation; and in dependence upon, or subjunction to, some other verb.

Clarke.

SUBJUNCTIVE.† adj. [subjunctivus, Latin; subjunctif, French.]

1. Subjoined to something else.

A few things more, subjunctive to the former, were thought meet to be castigated in preachers at that time. Hackel's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 87.

2. [In grammar.]

The verb undergoes a different formation, to signify the same intentions as the indicative, yet not absolutely but relatively to some other verb, which is called the subjunctive mood.

Clarke.

SUBLAPS'RIAN.† adj. [sub and lapsus, Lat.] Done after the fall of man.

The decree of reprobation, according to the sUBLAPSRIAN doctrine, being nothing else but a mere preterition, or non-election of some persons whom God left as he found, involved in the guilt of the first Adam's transgression, without any actual personal sin of their own, when he withdrew some others as guilty as they.

Hammond.

SUBLAPS'RIAN.* n. s. One who maintains the sUBLAPSRIAN doctrine.

The sUBLAPSRIANS say, that Adam having sinned freely, and his sin being imputed to all his posterity, God did consider mankind, thus lost, with an eye of pity; and having designed to rescue a great number out of this lost state, he decreed to send his Son to die for them, to accept of his death on their account, and to give them such assistances as should be effectual both to convert them to him, and to make them persevere to the end; but for the rest, he framed no positive act about them, only he left them in that lapsed state without intending that they should have the benefit of Christ's death, or of efficacious and persevering assistances.

Burnet on the Articles, Art. 17.

SUBLA'TION.† n. s. [sublatio, Lat.] The act of taking away.

He could not be forsaken by a sublation of union.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 188.

SUBLEVA'TION. n. s. [sublevo, Lat.] The act of raising on high.

SUBLI'MABLE. adj. [from sublime.] Possible to be sublimed.

SUBLI'MABLENESS. n. s. [from sublimable.] Quality of admitting sublimation.

He obtained another concrete as to taste and smell, and easy sublimableness, as common salt armoniack.

Boyle.

To SUBLIMATE. v. a. [from sublime.]

1. To raise by the force of chemical fire.

2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.

And as his actions rose, so raise they still their vein

In words, whose weight best suits a sublimated strain.

Drayton.

Not only the gross and illiterate souls, but the most aërial and sublimated, are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

The precepts of Christianity are so excellent and refined, and so apt to cleanse and sublimate the more gross and corrupt, as shews flesh and blood never revealed it.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

SUBLIMATE. n. s. [from sublime.]

1. Any thing raised by fire in the retort.

Enquire the manner of subliming, and what metals endure subliming, and what body the sublimate makes.

Bacon.

2. Quicksilver raised in the retort.

SUBLIMATE. adj. Raised by fire in the vessel.

The particles of mercury, uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt, compose mercury sublimate; and, with the particles of sulphur, cinnabar.

Newton, Opt.

SUBLIMA'TION. n. s. [sublimation, French; from sublimate.]

1. A chemical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from distillation, excepting that in distillation only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation; for the substances which are to be sublimed being solid, are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them.

Quincy.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the settlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation, or sublimation; that is, a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Since oil of sulphur per campanian is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts so strongly cohering by attraction, as to ascend together by sublimation?

Newton, Opt.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

She turns

Bodies to spirits, by sublimation strange. Davies.
Shall he pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality?

South.

SUBLI'ME. adj. [sublimis, Lat.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.

They summ'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime

With clang despis'd the ground. Milton, P. L.
Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd,
And dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward. Dryd.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature.

My earthly strained to the highth
In that celestial colloquy sublime. Milton, P. L.
Can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime;
And that the generous mind, releas'd by death,
Can covet lazy limbs?

Dryden.

3. High in style or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Easy in stile thy work, in sense sublime. Prior.

4. Elevated by joy.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heaven fall'n, in station stood of just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton, P. L.
Their hearts were jocund and sublime,
Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine.

Milton, S. A.

5. Lofty of mien; elevated in manner.

He was sublime, and almost tumorous, in his looks and gestures.

Wotton.

His fair large front and eye sublime declar'd Absolute rule. Milton, P. L.

SUBLI'ME. n. s. The grand or lofty style.

The sublime is a Gallicism, but now naturalized.

Longinus strengthens all his laws,
And is himself the great sublime he draws. Pope.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together.

Addison.

To SUBLI'ME. v. a. [sublimar, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chemical fire.

Study our manuscripts, those myriads
Of letters, which have past 'twixt thee and me, Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades. Donne.

2. To raise on high.

Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not help'd, itself sublime,
Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb.

Denham.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.

Flowers, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd
To vital spirits aspire. Milton, P. L.

The fancies of most are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which even in the most sublimed intellectuals is dangerously influential.

Glanville.

Art being strengthened by the knowledge of things, may pass into nature by slow degrees, and so be sublimed into a pure genius, which is capable of distinguishing betwixt the beauties of nature and that which is low in her.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine;
Which not alone the southern wits sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes. Pope.

To SUBLI'ME. v. n. To rise in the chemical vessel by the force of fire.

The particles of sal ammoniac in sublimation carry up the particles of antimony, which will not sublime alone.

Newton, Opt.

This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimates in a great one.

SUBLIMELY. adv. [from sublime.] Loftily; grandly.

In English lays, and all sublimely great,
Thy Homer charms with all his ancient heat.

Parnell.

Fustian's so sublimely bad;
It is not poetry, but prose run mad.

Pope.

SUBLIMENESS.† n. s. [sublimitas, Lat.] The same as sublimity.

Mr. Nairn was then the admired preacher of that country, remarkable for accuracy of style, as well as strength of reasoning and sublimeness of thought.

SUBLIMIFICATION.* n. s. [sublimis and factio, Latin.] The act of making sublime.

In general, the poet has great advantages over the painter, in the process of sublimification, if the term may be allowed.

Gilpin.

SUBLIMITY. n. s. [from sublime; sublimité, Fr. sublimitas, Lat.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.
2. Height of nature; excellence.

As religion looketh upon him who in majesty and power is infinite, as we ought we account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellency which our hearts conceive, when divine sublimity itself is rightly considered.

Hooker.

In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, this is also true, that God is neither a mind nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be discerned.

Raleigh.

3. Loftiness of style or sentiment.

Milton's distinguishing excellence lies in the sublimity of his thoughts, in the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient, Homer only excepted.

Addison.

SUBLINEATION.* n. s. [sub and lineation.] Mark of a line or lines under a word, or sentence.

I have compared his transcription, in which he hath made use of sublineation in lieu of asterisks.

Letters to Abp. Usher, &c. (1686.) p. 564.

SUBLINGUAL. adj. [sublingual, French; sub and lingua, Lat.] Placed under the tongue.

Those subliming humours should be intercepted, before they mount to the head, by sublingual pills.

Harvey.

SUBLUNAR. } adj. [sublunaire, Fr. sub
SUBLUNARY. } and luna, Lat.] Situated beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.

Dull sublunary lovers! love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it.

Donne.

Night measur'd, with her shadowy cone,
Half way up hill this vast sublunary vault.

Milton, P. L.

Through seas of knowledge we our course advance,

Discovering still new worlds of ignorance;
And these discoveries make us all confess
That sublunary science is but guess.

Denham.

The celestial bodies above the moon being not subject to chance, remained in perpetual order, while all things sublunary are subject to change.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Ovid had warn'd her to beware

Of strolling gods, whose usual trade is,

Under pretence of taking air,

To pick up sublunary ladies.

Swift.

The fair philosopher to Rowley flies,
Where in a box the whole creation lies;
She sees the planets in their turns advance;
And scorns, Poitier, this sublunary dance.

Young.

SUBLUNARY.* n. s. Any worldly thing.

Whatever temporal felicity we apprehend, we cull out the pleasures, and overprize them:—And that these sublunaries have their greatest freshness placed only in hope, it is a conviction undeniable, [as] that, upon enjoyment, all our joys do vanish.

Felham, Res. ii. 66.

SUBMARINE. adj. [sub and mare.] Lying or acting under the sea.

This contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the sight of the heavens for direction.

Wilkins.

Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the lithophyta, affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals.

Ray on the Creation.

TO SUBMERGE.† v. a. [submerger, Fr. submergo, Lat.] To drown; to put under water.

So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scald snakes.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Lost and submerg'd in the inundation.

Beaumont and Fl. Marital Maid.

TO SUBMERGE.* v. n. To be under water; to lie under water; spoken of swallows.

Some say, swallows submerge in ponds.

Genl. Mag. lxxviii. 670.

Scott.

SUBMERSION.† n. s. [submersion, Fr. from submersus, Latin.]

1. The act of drowning; state of being drowned.

The great Atlantic island is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean; which, if true, might afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submersion.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. State of lying under water.

The submersion of swallows appears by no means ascertained.

Transl. of Buffon's Hist. of Birds.

TO SUBMINISTER. } v. a. [submi-
TO SUBMINISTRATE. } nistro, Lat.]

To supply; to afford. A word not much in use.

Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministrated unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, than steams of nasty folks.

Harvey.

TO SUBMINISTER. v. n. To subserve; to be useful to.

Passions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminister to the best and worst purposes.

L'Estrange.

SUBMINISTRANT.* adj. [subministrans, Lat.] Subservient; serving in subordination.

For that which is most principal, and final, to be left undone for the attending of that which is subservient, and subministrant, seemeth to be against proportion of reason.

Bacon, Consid. on the Ch. of England.

SUBMINISTRATION.* n. s. [from subministrare.] Act of supplying.

Which [league] the electors have broken — by subministration of commodities to his army.

Wotton, Rem. p. 529.

SUBMISS.† adj. [from submissus, Lat.]

1. Humble; submissive; obsequious.

King James, mollified by the bishop's submiss and eloquent letters, wrote back, that, though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spake with him.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submiss approach, and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature, bowed low.

Milton, P. L.

Rejoicing, but with awe,

In adoration at his feet I fell

Submiss: he rear'd me,

Milton, P. L.

2. Low; not loud; gentle.

As age enfeebleth a man, the grindings are weaker, and the voices of them more submiss.

Smith on Old Age, p. 118.

SUBMISSION. n. s. [soumission, Fr. from submissus, Lat.]

1. Delivery of himself to the power of another.

Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere French word;
We English warriors wot not what it means.

Shakespeare.

2. Acknowledgement of inferiority or dependence; humble or suppliant behaviour.

In all submission and humility,
York doth present himself unto your highness.

Shakespeare.

Great prince, by that submission you 'll gain more
Than e'er your haughty courage won before.

Halifax.

3. Acknowledgement of a fault; confession of error.

Be not as extreme in submission as in offence.

Shakespeare.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation; obedience.

No duty in religion is more justly required by God Almighty, than a perfect submission to his will in all things.

Temple.

SUBMISSIVE. adj. [submissus, Lat.] Humble; testifying submission or inferiority.

On what submissive message art thou sent?

Shakespeare.

Her at his feet submissive in distress

He thus with peaceful words uprais'd.

Milton, P. L.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I hasted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look.

Prior.

SUBMISSIVELY. adv. [from submissive.] Humbly; with confession of inferiority.

The goddess,
Soft in her tone, submissively replies.

Dryden, Æn.

But speech ev'n there submissively withdraws
From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause;
Then pompous silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws.

Pope.

SUBMISSIVENESS. n. s. [from submissive.] Humility; confession of fault, or inferiority.

If thou sin in wine and wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story:

He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky.

Herbert.

SUBMISSLY. adv. [from submiss.] Humbly; with submission.

Humility consists, not in wearing mean clothes, and going softly and submissly, but in mean opinion of thyself.

Bp. Taylor.

SUBMISSNESS.* n. s. [from submit.] Humility; lowliness of mind; resignation; obedience.

I honour your names and persons, and with all submissness prostrate myself to your censure and service.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 137.
Whosoever she named God, though it were in common discourse, she would, for the most part, add the title of Maker; saying God my Maker; and compose both her eyes and countenance to a submissness and reverence.

Rowley, Transl. of Bacon on Qu. Eliz. (1637.)

To SUBMIT. v. a. [soumettre, French; submitto, Lat.]

1. To let down; to sink.

Sometimes the hill submits itself a while
In small descents, which do its height beguile,
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whose rise not hinders, but makes short our way.

Dryden.

Neptune stood,
With all his hosts of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit the officious flood,
And with his trident shov'd them off the sand.

Dryden.

2. To subject; to resign without resistance to authority.

Return to thy mistress, and submit thyself under her hands.

Gen. xvi. 9.

Christian people submit themselves to conformable observance of the lawful and religious constitutions of their spiritual rulers.

White.

Will ye submit your neck, and choose to bend
The supple knee?

Milton, P. L.

3. To leave to discretion; to refer to judgement.

Whether the condition of the clergy be able to bear a heavy burden, is submitted to the house.

Swift.

To SUBMIT. v. n. To be subject; to acquiesce in the authority of another; to yield.

To thy husband's will
Thine shall submit: he over thee shall rule.

Milton, P. L.

Our religion requires from us, not only to forego pleasure, but to submit to pain, disgrace, and even death.

Rogers.

SUBMITTER.* n. s. [from submit.] One who submits.

Sick but confident submitters of themselves to this empiric's cast of the dye.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 118.

To SUBMONISH.* v. a. [sub and monish; Lat. submonere.] To suggest; to put in mind; to prompt.

I withheld no delights from my senses, which, either by the wisdom of my mind, or by the submonishing inclinations of my senses, I perceived to afford access of joyful contentment.

Granger on Eccles. (1621), p. 56.

SUBMONITION.* n. s. [submonitus, Lat.] Suggestion; persuasion.

He should have obeyed the submonitions of his own conscience.

Granger on Eccles. p. 29.

SUBMULTIPLE. n. s. A submultiple number or quantity is that which is contained in another number a certain number of times exactly: thus 3 is submultiple of 21, as being contained in it seven times exactly.

Harris.

SUBNASCENT.* adj. [subnascens, Latin.] Growing beneath something else.

Mason.

There is nothing more prejudicial to subnascent young trees, than, when newly trimmed and pruned, to have their wound poisoned with continual dripping.

Evelyn, B. 1. ch. 20. § 9.

SUBOBSCURELY.* adv. [sub and obscure.]

Somewhat darkly:

The booke of Nature, where, though subobscurely and in shadows, thou [God] hast expressed thine own image.

Donne, Devot. p. 218.

SUBOCTAVE. } adj. [sub and octavus, Lat. SUBOCTUPLE. } and octuple.] Containing one part of eight.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness of the weights, and causes the power to be in a subtuple proportion, so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple, four a suboctuple.

Wilkins, Math. Magic.

Had they erected the cube of a foot for their principal concave, and geometrically taken its suboctave, the congius from the cube of half a foot, they would have divided the congius into eight parts, each of which would have been regularly the cube of a quarter foot, their well-known palm: this is the course taken for our gallon, which has the pint for its suboctave.

Arbutnot on Coins.

SUBORDINACY. } n. s. [from subordinate.]
SUBORDINANCY. } Subordinacy is the proper and analogical word.]

1. The state of being subject.

Pursuing the imagination through all its extravagancies, is no improper method of correcting, and bringing it to act in subordinacy to reason.

Spectator.

2. Series of subordination.

The subordinacy of the government changing hands so often, makes an unsteadiness in the pursuit of the public interests.

Temple.

SUBORDINATE. adj. [sub and ordinatus, Lat.]

1. Inferiour in order, in nature, in dignity, or power.

It was subordinate, not enslaved to the understanding; not as a servant to a master, but as a queen to her king, who acknowledges a subjection, yet retains a majesty.

South.

Whether dark presages of the night proceed from any latent power of the soul, during her abstraction, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a dispute.

Addison.

2. Descending in a regular series.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, rather counters than martial men, yet assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience.

Bacon.

These carry such plain characters of disagreement or affinity, that the several kinds and subordinate species of each are easily distinguished.

Woodward.

SUBORDINATE.* n. s.

1. An inferiour person.

The governour intreating to take down
That glorious stile, lest he the Hebrew crown
Should vindicate in death; and so deny.
That princes by subordinates should die.

Sandys, Christ's Passion, (1640), p. 46.

2. One of a descent in a regular series.

His next subordinate

Awakening, thus to him in secret spake.

Milton, P. L.

To SUBORDINATE.† v. a. [sub and ordino, Lat.] To range under another; to make subordinate. Not in use, but proper and elegant, Dr. Johnson observes, but cites only the example from Wotton. Few words can boast better authority.

Works [are] not only not excluded, but commanded, as being in their place and in their kind necessary, and therefore subordinated unto Christ by Christ himself.

Hooker, Disc. on Justification, § 30.

As I have subordinated picture and sculpture to architecture as their mistresses, so there are certain inferior arts likewise subordinate to them.

Wotton on Architecture.

I hate and highly scorn that kestrel brood
Of bastard scholars, that subordinate
The precious choice induements of the mind
To wealth or worldly good.

More, Philos. Poems, p. 308.

The stars fight in their courses under his banner, and subordinate their powers to the dictates of his will.

South, Serm. vii. 23.

SUBORDINATELY. adv. [from subordinate.]

In a series regularly descending.

It being the highest step of ill, to which all others *subordinate*ly tend, one would think it could be capable of no improvement.

SUBORDINATION. n. s. [subordination, Fr. from subordinate.]

1. The state of being inferiour to another.

Nor can a council national decide,
But with subordination to her guide.

Dryden.

2. A series regularly descending.

The natural creatures having a local subordination, the rational having a political, and sometimes a sacred.

Holyday.

3. Place of rank.

If we would suppose a ministry, where every single person was of distinguished piety, and all great officers of state and law diligent in chasing persons, who in their several subordinations would be obliged to follow the examples of their superiors, the empire of ireligion would be soon destroyed.

Swift.

To SUBORN. v. a. [suborner, Fr. suborno, Lat.]

1. To procure privately; to procure by secret collusion.

His judges were the self-same men by whom
His accusers were suborned.

Hooker.

Fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speak'st,

Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In hateful practice.

Shakespeare.

Reason may meet
Some specious object, by the foe suborn'd,

And fall into deception.

Milton.

His artful bosom heaves dissembled sighs;
And tears suborn'd fall dropping from his eyes.

Prior.

2. To procure by indirect means.

Behold

Those who by lingering sickness lose their breath,
And those who by despair suborn their death.

Dryden.

SUBORNATION. n. s. [subornation, Fr. from suborn.] The crime of procuring any to do a bad action.

Thomas earl of Desmond was, through false subornation of the queen of Edward IV. brought to his death at Tredagh most unjustly.

Spenser on Ireland.

You set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man,
And for his sake wear the detested blot
Of murder's subornation.

Shaks. Hen. IV.

The fear of punishment in this life will preserve men from few vices, since some of the blackest often prove the surest steps to favour; such as ingratitude, hypocrisy, treachery, and subornation.

Swift.

SUBORNER.† n. s. [suborneur, Fr. from suborn.] One that procures a bad action to be done.

You are to enquire of wilful and corrupt perjury; — as well of the actors, as of the procurers and suborners of it.

Bacon, Charge at the Sess. of the Verge.

SUBPENNA.† n. s. [sub and penna, Lat.] A writ commanding attendance in a court under a penalty.

Your meetings, call'd the ball; to which appear,

Of things to come, at large.

Shaks. Tr. and Cress.

The subsequent words come on before the precedent vanish.

Bacon.

Why does each consenting sign With prudent harmony combine

In turns to move, and subsequent appear To gird the globe and regulate the year?

Prior.

This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion.

Swift.

SUBSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.] Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing, most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends; but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by postliminious after-applications of them to their purposes.

South.

To SUBSERVE. v. a. [subservio, Lat.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule,
But to subserve where wisdom bears command.

Milton, S. A.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy.

Glanville.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers.

Walsh.

SUBSERVIENCE. } n. s. [from subserve.]
SUBSERVIENCY. } Instrumental fitness, use, or operation.

Dryden.

There is an immediate and agile subservience of the spirits to the empire of the soul.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subservience to infinite functions, any otherwise than as the effect of contrivance.

Bentley.

There is a regular subordination and subservience among all the parts to beneficial ends.

Cheyne, Philos. Princip.

SUBSERVIENT. adj. [subserviens, Lat.] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Hammond had an incredible dexterity, scarce ever reading any thing which he did not make subservient in one kind or other.

Fell.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things are referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods.

Stillingfleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them serviceable to man.

Ray.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein.

Greuv.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect.

Greuv.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an uniform being, void of organs, members or parts, and they are his creatures subordinate to him, and subservient to his will.

4 U

Newton, Opt.

Most critics, fond of some subservient art, Still make the whole depend upon a part; They talk of principles, but notions prize, And all to one low'd folly sacrifice.

Pope.

SUBSEXUPLE. adj. [sub and sexuple, Lat.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under-pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subsexuple.

Wilkins, Math. Magic.

To SUBSIDE. v. n. [subsido, Lat.] To sink; to tend downwards. It is commonly used of one part of a compound, sinking in the whole. Pope has used it rather improperly.

He shook the sacred honours of his head; With terror trembled heaven's subsiding hill; And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distil.

Dryden.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air, Weighs the men's wits against the lady's hair; The doubtful beam long nods from side to side: At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.

Pope.

SUBSIDENCE. n. s. [from subside.] The SUBSIDENCY. f act of sinking; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidence of the abyss would take up a considerable time.

Burnet, Theory.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specific gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time.

Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air-bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated.

Arbuthnot.

Milton, P. L.

The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republic could subsist any longer.

Swift.

3. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded.

Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessities, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity.

Atterbury.

4. To inhere; to have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy.

South.

To SUBSIST. v. a. To feed: to maintain.

We decry millions of species subsisted on a green leaf, which your glasses represent only in crowds and swarms.

Addison, Teller, No. 119.

SUBSISTENCE, or Subsistency. n. s. [subsistence, Fr. from subsist.]

1. Real being.

The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God, began both at one instant; his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act; so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting.

Hooker.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced.

Glanville.

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing.

Stillingfleet.

2. Competence; means of supporting life.

His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province.

Addison.

Shakespeare.

He the future evil shall no less In apprehension than in substance feel.

Milton, P. L.

Heroick virtue did his actions guide, And he the substance, not th' appearance, chose:

To rescue one such friend he took more pride, Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes.

Dryden.

God is no longer to be worshipped and believed in as a God foretelling and assuring by types, but as a God who has performed the substance of what he promised.

Nelson.

5. Body; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opaque and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities; as, water between the tinging corpuscles wherewith any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part spaces void of both air and water; but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies.

Newton.

The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

There may be a great and constant cough, with an extraordinary discharge of flegmatick matter, while, notwithstanding, the substance of the lungs remains sound.

Blackmore.

6. Wealth; means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his, but I will have some of it out again.

She with extended arms his aid implores. Thomson.

SUCCUBA.* } n. s. [sub and cubo, Latin.]

SUCCUBUS. } A pretended kind of demon. See INCUBUS.

His ancient grandame,

Though seeming in shape a woman natural,

Was a feend of the kind that succubæ some call.

Mir. for Mag. p. 329.

One of their own fables is here mythologized and explained, Of a church-yard carcass raised and set a strutting by the inflation of some hellish succubus within.

Warburton on Prod. p. 63.

SUCCULENCY. * } n. s. [from succulent.]

SUCCULENCY. } Juiciness.

The succulency of the nerves, in a healthy man, depends upon the goodness and due quantity of the blood that enters the vessels of the brain.

Kinnier's Essay on the Nerves, (1739), p. 55.

SUCCULENT. adj. [succulent, Fr. succulentus, Lat.] Juicy; moist.

These plants have a strong, dense, and succulent

moisture, which is not apt to exhale. Bacon.

Divine Providence has spread her table every where, not with a juiceless green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grass upon which most beasts feed. More.

On our account has Jove,

Indulgent, to all moons some succulent plant

Allotted, that poor helpless man might slack

His present thirst.

Philips.

TO SUCCUMB. * } v. n. [succumbo, Lat. succomber, Fr.] To yield; to sink under any difficulty.

Not in use, except

among the Scotch. Dr. Johnson.—

Dr. Johnson is mistaken. Warburton has repeatedly used it; and another learned prelate of later times has employed it.

To their wills we must succumb,

Quocunque trahunt, 'tis our doom. Hudibras.

Wisdom succumbing under the bauble of folly.

Warburton, Sermon. iii. 146.

Our fortitude is our best resource, as within us;

it may give way to an irresistible torrent, it may bend under the weight of malignancy and opposition, yet not succumb.

Philosoph. Lett. on Physiogn. (1751), p. 259.

Thinking, as I do, that Popery is every where succumbing under the general diffusion of knowledge.

Bp. Landaff, (Watson,) Charge (in 1805,) p. 40.

SUCCUSSATION. * } n. s. [succussatio, low Lat.] A trot.

They move two legs of one side together, which is trotation or ambling, or lift one foot before and the cross foot behind, which is succussation or trotting.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

They rode, but authors having not Determin'd whether pace or trot,

That is to say, whether trotation,

As they do term 't, or succussation. Hudibras.

SUCCUSSION. n. s. [succussio, Lat.]

1. The act of shaking.

2. [In physick.] Is such a shaking of the nervous parts as is procured by strong stimuli, like sternutatories, friction, and the like, which are commonly used in apoplectic affections.

When any of that risible species were brought to the doctor, and when he considered the spasms of the diaphragm, and all the muscles of respiration, with the tremulous succussion of the whole human body, he gave such patients over.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

SUCH. * } adj. [swaleik, Goth. i. e. swa, so; and leik, like; sulck, solk, Teut. i. e. so-like; pilck, Saxon. Wicliffe uses swilke for such.]

1. Of that kind; of the like kind. With as before the thing to which it relates, when the thing follows: as, such a power as a king's; such a gift as a kingdom.

'Tis such another fitchew! marry, a perfum'd one.

Shakspeare.

Can we find such a one as this, in whom the spirit of God is? Gen. xli. 38.

The works of the flesh are manifest, such are drunkenness, revellings, and such like. Gal. v. 21.

You will not make this a general rule to debar such from preaching of the Gospel, as have through infirmity fallen. Whitegift.

Such another idol was Manah, worshipped between Mecca and Medina, which was called a rock or stone. Stillingfleet.

Such precepts as tend to make men good, singly considered, may be distributed into such as enjoin piety towards God, or such as require the good government of ourselves.

Tillotson.

If my song be such,

That you will hear and credit me too much,

Attentive listen. Dryden.

Such are the cold Riphean race, and such.

The savage Scythian. Dryden.

As to be perfectly just is an attribute in the Divine Nature, to be so to the utmost of our abilities, is the glory of a man: such an one, who has the public administration, acts like the representa-tative of his Maker. Addison.

You love a verse, take such as I can send. Pope.

2. The same that; with as.

This was the state of the kingdom of Tunis at such time as Barbarossa, with Solyman's great fleet, landed in Africa. Knolles.

3. Comprehended under the term pre-missed, like what has been said.

That thou art happy, owe to God;

That thou continu'st such, owe to thyself.

Milton, P. L.

To assert that God looked upon Adam's fall as a sin, and punished it as such, when, without any antecedent sin, he withdrew that actual grace, upon which it was impossible for him not to fall, highly reproaches the essential equity of the Divine Nature. South.

No promise can oblige a prince so much,

Still to be good, as long to have been such.

Dryden.

4. A manner of expressing a particular person or thing.

I saw him yesterday

With such and such. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

If you repay me not on such a day,
In such a place, such sum or sums, as are Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit
Be an equal pound of your flesh.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
I have appointed my servants to such and such place. I Sam.

Scarce this word death from sorrow did proceed,
When in rush'd one, and tells him such a knight
Is now arriv'd. Daniel, Civ. War.

Himself overtook a party of the army, consisting of three thousand horse and foot, with a train of artillery, which he left at such a place, within three hours' march of Berwick. Clarendon.

suctum, Latin; succer, French.]

1. To draw by making a rarefaction of the air.

2. To draw in with the mouth.

The cup of astonishment thou shalt drink, and suck it out. Ezek. xxiii. 34.

We 'll hand in hand to the dark mansions go,
Where, sucking in each other's latest breath,
We may transfuse our souls. Dryden.

Still she drew
The sweets from ev'ry flower, and suck'd the dew.
Dryden.

Transfix'd as o'er Castalia's streams he hung,
He suck'd new poisons with his triple tongue.
Pope, Statius.

3. To draw the teat of a female.

Desire, the more he suck'd, more sought the breast,

Like dropsy folk still drink to be athirst. Sidney.
A bitch will nurse young foxes in place of her puppies, if you can get them once to suck her so long that her milk may go through them. Locke.

Did a child suck every day a new nurse, it would be no more affrighted with the change of faces at six months old than at sixty. Locke.

4. To draw with the milk.

Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'd'st it from me;

But own thy pride thyself. Shaks. Coriol.

5. To empty by sucking.

Continual repairs, the least defects in sucking
pumps are constantly requiring.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To draw the breast.

Such as are nourished with milk find the paps, and suck at them; whereas none of those that are not designed for that nourishment ever offer to suck. Ray on the Creation.

I would

Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
To win thee, lady. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

A nursing father beareth with the sucking child.
Numb. xi.

3. To draw; imbibe.

The crown had sucked too hard, and now, being full, was like to draw less. Bacon, Hen. VIII.

SUCK. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of sucking.

I hoped, from the descent of the quicksilver in the tube, upon the first suck, that I should be able to give a nearer guess at the proportion of force betwixt the pressure of the air and the gravity of quicksilver. Boyle.

2. Milk given by females.

They draw with their suck the disposition of nurses. Spenser.

I have given suck, and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me.

first history of Romulus, who was begot by the god of war, and suckled by a wolf.

Addison on Italy.

SUCKLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A teat;
a dug.

The body of this fish [the manatee or cowfish] is three yards long, and one broad, thick-skin'd, without scales, narrow towards the tail which is nervous, slow in swimming, wanting fins; in place whereof, she is aided with two paps, which are not only suckles, but serve for stilts to creep ashore upon. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 26.

SUCKLING. n. s. [from suck.] A young creature yet fed by the pap.

I provide a suckling,
That ne'er had nourishment but from the teat.

Dryden.
Young animals participate of the nature of their tender aliment, as sucklings of milk.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SUCTION. n. s. [from suck; succion, Fr.]
The act of sucking.

Sounds exterior and interior may be made by suction, as by emission of the breath. Bacon.

Though the valve were not above an inch and a half in diameter, yet the weight kept up by suction, or supported by the air, and what was cast out of it, weighed ten pounds. Boyle.

Cornelius regulated the suction of his child.
Arbuthnot.

SUDARY.* n. s. [sudarium, Lat.] A napkin or handkerchief. Prompt. Parv.

Lo, thi besaunt that I hadde put up in a sudarye. Wicliffe, St. Luke, xix.

SUDATION. n. s. [sudo, Lat.] Sweat.

SUDATORY. † n. s. [sudo, Latin.] Hothouse; sweating-bath.

Shiraz is—defended by nature, enriched by trade, and by art made lovely; the vineyards, gardens, cypresses, sudatories, and temples, ravishing the eye and smell, so as in every part she appears delightful and beautiful.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 128.

SUDDEN. adj. [soudain, French; roben,
Saxon.]

1. Happening without previous notice; coming without the common preparatives; coming unexpectedly.

We have not yet set down this day of triumph;
To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden.

Shakespeare.

There was never any thing so sudden but Caesar's thrasonical brag, of I came, saw, and overcame.

Shakespeare.

Herbs sudden flower'd,
Opening their various colours. Milton, P. L.

His death may be sudden to him, though it comes by never so slow degrees.

Wh. Duty of Man.

2. Hasty; violent; rash; passionate; precipitate. Not now in use.

I grant him
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin. Shaks.

SUDDEN. n. s.

1. An unexpected occurrence; surprise.
Not in use.

Parents should mark the witty excuses of their children at suddains and surprisals, rather than pamper them. Wotton.

2. On or of a SUDDEN, or upon a SUDDEN.
Sooner than was expected; without the natural or commonly accustomed preparatives.

Following the flyers at the very heels,
With them he enters, who upon the sudden Clapt to their gates. Shakspeare, Coriol.
How art thou lost, how on a sudden lost!

They keep their patients so warm as almost to stife them, and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.

When you have a mind to leave your master, grow rude and saucy of a sudden, and beyond your usual behaviour. Swift.

SUDDENLY. adv. [from sudden.]

1. In an unexpected manner; without preparation; hastily.

You shall find three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly. Shakspeare.
If elision of the air made the sound, the touch of the bell or string could not extinguish so suddenly that motion. Bacon.

To the pale foes they suddenly draw near,
And summon them to unexpected fight. Dryden.
She struck the warlike spear into the ground,
Which sprouting leaves did suddenly enclose
And peaceful olives shaded as they rose. Dryden.

2. Without premeditation.

If thou canst accuse,
Do it without invention suddenly. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

SUDDENNESS. n. s. [from sudden.] State of being sudden; unexpected presence; manner of coming or happening unexpectedly.

All in the open hall amazed stood,
At suddenness of that unwary sight,
And wonder'd at his breathless hasty mood. Spenser.

He speedily run forward, counting his suddenness his most advantage, that he might overtake the English. Spenser.

The rage of people is like that of the sea, which, once breaking bounds, overflows a country with that suddenness and violence as leaves no hopes of flying. Temple.

SUDORIFICK. adj. [from sudorifque, Fr. sudor and facio, Lat.] Provoking or causing sweat.

Physicians may well provoke sweat in bed by bottles, with a decoction of sudorifick herbs in hot water. Bacon.

Exhaling the most liquid parts of the blood by sudorifick or watery evaporations, brings it into a morbid state. Arbuthnot.

SUDORIFICK. n. s. A medicine promoting sweat.

As to sudorificks, consider that the liquid which goes off by sweat is often the most subtle part of the blood. Arbuthnot.

SUDOROUS. adj. [from sudor, Latin.] Consisting of sweat. Not used.

Beside the strigments and sudorous adhesions from men's hands, nothing proceedeth from gold in the usual decoction thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Beaum. and Fl. Wild-Goose Chase.

TO SUE. † v. a. [from suer, French.]

1. To prosecute by law.

If any sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. St. Mat. v. 40.

2. To gain by legal procedure.

I am denied to sue my livery here,
And yet my letters patent give me leave. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

3. To follow; to ensue.

Lechery that sueth always gluttony. Lib. Fest. fol. 5.

4. [In falconry.] To clean the beak, as a hawk.

TO SUE. v. n. To beg; to entreat; to petition.

Full little knowest thou that hast not try'd,
What hell it is in suing long to bide. Spenser.

If me thou deign to serve and sue,
At thy command to all these mountains be. Spenser.

When maidens sue,
Men give like gods. Shakspeare.

We were not born to sue, but to command.

Ambassadors came unto him as far as the mouth of the Euphrates, suing unto him for peace. Knolles.

For this, this only favour let me sue,
Refuse it not; but let my body have
The last retreat of human kind, a grave. Dryden, Æn.

Despise not then, that in our hands bear we
These holy boughs, and sue with words of prayer. Dryden.

'T will never be too late,
To sue for chains, and own a conqueror. Addison, Cato.

The fair Egyptian
Courtied with freedom now the beauteous slave,
Now faltring sued, and threat'ning now did rave. Blackmore.

By adverse destiny constrain'd to sue
For counsel and redress, he sues to you. Pope, Odys.

TO SUE. v. a. To obtain by entreaty: with out. The expression is perhaps improper.

Nor was our blessed Saviour only our propitiation to die for us, but he is still our advocate, continually interceding with his Father in the behalf of all true penitents, and suing out a pardon for them in the court of heaven. Calamy.

SU'ER.* n. s. [from sue.] One who seeks to obtain by entreaty; a suitor. Not in use.

The woman perceiving by the slowness of his pace, that he rather seemed to be a suer, than a pursuer of her, replied to his words.

Lord's Hist. of the Banians, (1630), p. 21.

SU'ET. n. s. [from suet, an old French word, according to Skinner.] A hard fat, particularly that about the kidneys.

The steatoma being suet, yields not to escarotics. Wiseman.

SU'ERY. adj. [from suet.] Consisting of suet; resembling suet.

If the matter forming a wen resembles fat or a suet substance, it is called steatoma. Sharp, Surgery.

TO SUFFER. † v. a. [from suffer, old French;
to which Lacombe assigns the date of the eleventh century; souffrir, modern;
suffero, Latin.]

1. To bear; to undergo; to feel with sense of pain.

A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment.

A woman suffered many things of physicians, and spent all she had. St. Mark, v. 26.

Shall we then live thus vile, the race of heaven
Thus trampled, thus expell'd to suffer here Chains and these torments? Better these than worse.

By my advice; since fate inevitable
Subdues us, and omnipotent decree,
The victor's will. To suffer, as to do,
Our strength is equal, nor the law unjust
That so ordains. Milton, P. L.

2. To endure; to support; not to sink under.

Our spirit and strength entire Strongly to suffer and support our pains. Milton, P. L.

3. To allow; to permit; not to hinder.

He wonder'd that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home. Shakspeare.

Often have I seen a hot o'erweening cur
Run back and bite, because he was withheld:
Who being suffered, with the bear's fell paw
Hath clapt his tail betwix his legs and cry'd. Shakspeare.

My duty cannot suffer
To obey in all your daughter's hard commands. Shakspeare.

Rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sin upon him. Levit.

I suffer them to enter and possess. Milton, P. L.

He that will suffer himself to be informed by observation, will find few signs of a soul accustomed to much thinking in a new-born child. Locke.

4. To pass through; to be affected by; to be acted upon.

The air now must suffer change. Milton, P. L.

TO SUFFER. v. n.

1. To undergo pain or inconvenience.

My breast I arm, to overcome by suffering. Milton, P. L.

Prudence and good-breeding are in all stations necessary; and most young men suffer in the want of them. Locke.

2. To undergo punishment.

The father was first condemned to suffer upon a day appointed, and the son afterwards the day following. Clarendon.

He thus
Was forc'd to suffer for himself and us!
Heir to his father's sorrows and his crown. Dryden.

3. To be injured.

Publick business suffers by private infirmities, and kingdoms fall into weaknesses by the diseases or decays of those that manage them. Temple.

SUFFERABLE. † adj. [from suffer; suffrable, old Fr.] Tolerable; that may be endured.

Thy rages be
Now no more sufferable. Chapman.

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own writing, but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office. Watton.

SUFFERABLENESS.* n. s. [from sufferable.]
Tolerableness. Scott.

SUFFERABLY. adv. [from sufferable.] Tolerably; so as to be endured.

An infant Titan held she in her arms;
Yet sufferably bright, the eye might bear
The ungrown glories of his beamy hair. Addison.

SUFFERANCE. n. s. [from suffer; souffrance,
French.]

1. Pain; inconvenience; misery.

He must not only die,
But thy unkindness shall the death draw out
To ling'ring sufferance. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

How much education may reconcile young people to pain and sufferance, the examples of Sparta shew. Locke on Education.

2. Patience; moderation.

He thought t' have slain her in his fierce de-spight;
But, hasty heat tempering with sufferance wise,
He staid his hand. Spenser.

He hath given excellent sufferance, and vigorousness to the sufferers, arming them with strange courage.

Bp. Taylor.

Nor was his sufferance of other kinds less exemplary than that he evidenced in the reception of calamity.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

And should I touch it nearly, bear it
With all the sufferance of a tender friend.

Uwaj, Orphan.

3. Toleration; permission; not hinderance.

Most wretched man,

That to affections does the bridle lend;

In their beginning they are weak and wan,

But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end.

Spenser.

In process of time, somewhiles by sufferance, and somewhiles by special leave and favour, they erected to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner.

Hooker.

Some villains of my court

Are in consent and sufferance in this. Shakspeare.

Both gloried to have 'scap'd the Stygian flood,

As gods, and by their own recover'd strength;

Not by the suff'rance of supernal power.

Milton, P. L.

SUFFERER. n. s. [from suffer.]

1. One who endures or undergoes pain or inconvenience.

This evil on the Philistines is fall'n,

The sufferers then will scarce molest us here:

From other hands we need not much to fear.

Milton, S. A.

He when his love was bounded in a few,
That were unhappy that they might be true,

Made you the fav'rite of his last sad times,

That is, a sufferer in his subjects' crimes. Dryden.

She returns to me with joy in her face, not from the sight of her husband, but from the good luck

she has had at cards; and if she has been a loser, I am doubly a sufferer by it: she comes home out of humour, because she has been throwing away

my estate. Addison, Spect.

The history of civil wars and rebellions does not make such deep and lasting impressions, as events of the same nature in which we or our friends have been sufferers. Addison.

Often these unhappy sufferers expire for want of sufficient vigour and spirit to carry on the animal regimen. Blackmore.

2. One who allows; one who permits.

SUFFERING. n. s. [from suffer.] Pain suffered.

Rejoice in my sufferings for you. Col. i. 24.

With what strength, what steadiness of mind,

He triumphs in the midst of all his sufferings!

Addison.

We may hope the sufferings of innocent people, who have lived in that place which was the scene of rebellion, will secure from the like attempts.

Addison.

It increased the smart of his present sufferings to compare them with his former happiness.

Atterbury.

Then it is that the reasonableness of God's providence, in relation to the sufferings of good men in this world, will be fully justified. Nelson.

SUFFERINGLY. adv. [from suffering.]

With pain.

An ἀσπαδίζων, or an affect or moving sufferingly

to become matter.

Cabalistical Dialogue, (1682), p. 8.

To SUFFICE. v. n. [suffire, Fr. sufficio,

Latin.] To be enough; to be sufficient;

to be equal to the end or purpose.

If thou ask me why, sufficeth, my reasons are good. Shakspeare.

To recount almighty works

What words or tongue of seraph can suffice,

Or heart of man suffice to comprehend?

Milton, P. L.

The indolency we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change;

being content; and that is enough. Locke.

He lived in such temperance, as was enough to make the longest life agreeable; and in such a course of piety, as sufficed to make the most sudden death so also.

Pope.

To SUFFICE. v. a.

1. To afford; to supply.

A strong and succulent moisture is able, without drawing help from the earth, to suffice the sprouting of the plant.

Bacon.

Thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn

Suffices fatness to the fruitful corn,

Shall share my morning song and evening vows.

Dryden.

The pow'r appears'd, with winds suffic'd the sail;

The belling canvass strutted with the gale.

Dryden.

2. To satisfy; to be equal to want or demand.

Israel, let it suffice you of all your abominations.

Ezekiel.

Parched corn she did eat, and was sufficed, and left. Ruth.

Let it suffice thee that thou know'st us happy.

Milton, P. L.

He our conqueror left us this our strength,

That we may so suffice his vengeful ire.

Milton, P. L.

When the herd suffic'd, did late repair

To ferny heaths, and to the forest laze. Dryden.

SUFFICIENCY. n. s. [suffissance, Fr. from sufficient.]

1. State of being adequate to the end proposed.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience

To those that wring under the load of sorrow;

But no man's virtue nor sufficiency

To be so moral, when he shall endure

The like himself. Shakspeare.

His sufficiency is such, that he bestows and possesses, his plenty being unexhausted. Boyle.

This he did with that readiness and sufficiency, as at once gave testimony to his ability, and to the evidence of the truth he asserted.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

2. Qualification for any purpose.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counsel of others.

King Charles.

The bishop, perhaps an Irishman, being made judge, by that law, of the sufficiency of the ministers, may dislike the Englishman as unworthy.

Spenser on Ireland.

Their pensioner De Wit was a minister of the greatest authority and sufficiency ever known in their state. Temple.

3. Competence; enough.

An elegant sufficiency, content. Thomson.

4. Supply equal to want.

The most proper subjects of dispute are questions not of the very highest importance, nor of the meanest kind; but rather the intermediate questions between them: and there is a large sufficiency

of them in the sciences.

Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

5. It is used by Temple for that conceit which makes a man think himself equal to things above him; and is commonly compounded with self.

Sufficiency is a compound of vanity and ignorance. Temple.

SUFFICIENT. adj. [suffisant, Fr. sufficiens, Latin.]

1. Equal to any end or purpose; enough; competent; not deficient.

Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

St. Matt. vi. 34.

Heaven yet retains

Number sufficient to possess her realms.

Milton, P. L.

Man is not sufficient of himself to his own happiness. Tillotson.

It is sufficient for me, if, by a discourse something out of the way, I shall have given occasion to others to cast about for new discoveries. Locke.

She would ruin me in silks, were not the quantity that goes to a large pin-cushion sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat.

Addison.

Sufficient beneficence is what is competent to maintain a man and his family, and maintain hospitality; and likewise to pay and satisfy such debts belonging to the bishop.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

Seven months are a sufficient time to correct vice in a Yahoo.

Swift.

2. Qualified for any thing by fortune or otherwise.

In saying he is a good man, understand me, that he is sufficient.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

SUFFICIENTLY. adv. [from sufficient.] To a sufficient degree; enough.

If religion did possess sincerely and sufficiently the hearts of all men, there would need be no other restraint from evil.

Hooker.

Seem I to thee sufficiently possess'd

Of happiness? Milton.

All to whom they are proposed, are by his grace sufficiently moved to attend and assent to them; sufficiently, but not irresistibly; for if all were irresistibly moved, all would embrace them; and if none were sufficiently moved, none would embrace them.

Rogers.

In a few days, or hours, if I am to leave this carcase to be buried in the earth, and to find myself either for ever happy in the favour of God, or eternally separated from all light and peace; can any words sufficiently express the littleness of every thing else?

Law.

SUFFISANCE. n. s. [French.] Excess; plenty. Obsolete.

There him rests in riotous suffisance

Of all gladfulness and kindly joyance. Spenser.

To SUFFLAMINATE. v. a. [sufflamino, suffoco, Lat.] To choke by exclusion or interception of air.

Let galleys gape for dog, let man go free,

And let not hump his windpipe suffocate. Shaks.

Air but momentarily remains in our bodies, only to refrigerate the heart; which being once performed, lest, being self-heated again, it should suffocate

that part, it hasteth back the same way it passed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

A swelling discontent is apt to suffocate and strangle without passage. Collier of Friendship.

All invol'd in smoke, the latent foe

From every cranny suffocated falls. Thomson.

suffocate.] The act of choking; the state of being choked.

Diseases of stoppings and suffocations are dangerous. Bacon.

White consists in an equal mixture of all the primitive colours, and black in a suffocation of all the rays of light. Cheyne.

Mushrooms are best corrected by vinegar; some of them being poisonous, operate by suffocation, in which the best remedy is wine or vinegar and salt, and vomiting as soon as possible.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

SUFFOCATIVE. adj. [from suffocate.] Having the power to choke.

From rain, after great frosts in the winter, glandulous tumours and suffocative catarrhs proceed.

Arbutnot on Air.

SUFFOSSION.* n. s. [suffossio, Latin.] The act of digging under.

Those conspiracies against maligned sovereignty, those suffossions of walls, those powder-trains.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

SUFFRAGAN.† n. s. [suffragant, Fr. suffraganeus, Lat.]

1. A bishop considered as subject to his metropolitan.

The four archbishops of Mexico, Lima, S. Foy, and Dominico, have under them twenty-five suffragan-bishops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

Suffragan-bishops shall have more than one riding apparitor.

Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, insolently took upon him to declare five articles void, in his epistle to his suffragans.

Hale.

2. An assistant bishop: this is the more proper sense of the word. By an act, 26 Hen. VIII. suffragans were to be denominated from some principal place in the diocese of the prelate, whom they were to assist.

For a bishop to have a coadjutor, or, as the statute calls him, a suffragan to assist him, was no new thing, but of ancient use in England before Henry the Eighth.—Such suffragan, or coadjutor, was to have no revenue or jurisdiction in his diocese, whose suffragan he was; save what the bishop should by commission under his seal allow him.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 161.

SUFFRAGANT.* adj. [suffragans, Latin.] Assisting; concurring with.

Heavenly doctrine ought to be chief ruler and principal head every where, and not suffragant and subsidiary.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613.) p. 175.

If I should let my pen loose to the suffragant testimonies whether of antiquity, or of modern divines and reformed churches, I should try your patience, and instead of a letter send you a volume.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 302.

SUFFRAGANT.* n. s. An assistant; a favourer; one who concurs with.

Hoping to find them more friends and suffragants to the virtues and modesty of sober women, than enemies to their beauty.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 118.

TO SUFFRAGATE. v. n. [suffragor, Latin.] To vote with; to agree in voice with.

No tradition could universally prevail, unless there were some common congruity of somewhat inherent in nature, which suits and suffragates with it, and closeth with it.

Hale.

SUFFRAGATOR.* n. s. [suffragator, Lat.] A favourer; one that helps with his vote.

The Synod in the Low Countries is held at Dort; the most of their suffragators are already assembled.

Bp. of Chester to Abp. Usher, (1618.) Lett. p. 67.

SUFFRAGE.† n. s. [suffrage, Fr. suffragium, Lat.]

1. Vote; voice given in a controverted point.

Noble confederates, thus far is perfect, Only your suffrages I will expect At the assembly for the chusing of consuls.

B. Jonson.

King Charles.

The fairest of our island dare not commit their cause to the suffrage of those who most partially adore them,

Addison.

Fabius might joy in Scipio, when he saw A beardless consul made against the law; And join his suffrage to the votes of Rome.

Dryden.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, is extremely agreeable, the ancients and moderns giving their suffrages unanimously herein.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Lactantius and St. Austin confirm by their suffrage the observation made by the heathen writers.

Atterbury.

To the law and to the testimony let the appeal be in the first place; and next to the united suffrage of the primitive churches, as the best and safest comment upon the other.

Waterland.

2. United voice of persons in publick prayer.

This is said in reference to the chants, responds, suffrages, versicles.

Pref. to the Vers. of the Ps. (1550.)

The suffrages next after the Creed shall stand thus. Comm. Pr. Form of Thanks, for May 29.

3. Aid; assistance: a Latinism.

They make little account of indulgences, especially of those which are to be applied to the souls in purgatory by way of suffrage.

Dorrington, Obs. on the Rom. Ch. (1699.) p. 191.

SUFFRAGINOUS. adj. [suffrago, Lat.] Belonging to the knee-joint of beasts.

In elephants, the bought of the forelegs is not directly backward, but laterally, and somewhat inward; but the hough or suffraginous flexure behind, rather outward.

Brown.

SUFFUMIGATION.† n. s. [suffumigatio, Fr. suffumigo, Lat.] Operation of fumes raised by fire.

We commend a fume, or suffumigation, every morning, of dried rosemary.

Bacon, Hist. of Life and Death.

If the matter be so gross as it yields not to remedies, it may be attempted by suffumigation.

Wiseman, Surgery.

SUFFUMIGE. n. s. [suffumigo, Lat.] A medical fume. Not used.

For external means, drying suffumiges or smoaks are prescribed with good success; they are usually composed out of frankincense, myrrh, and pitch.

Harvey.

TO SUFFUSE.† v. a. [suffusus, Lat.] To spread over with something expansible, as with a vapour or a tincture.

[She] can comfort her in her rude wise, With womanish compassion of her plaint, Wiping the tears from her suffused eyes.

Spenser, F. Q.

Suspensions, and fantastical surmise, And jealousy suffus'd with jaundice in her eyes.

Dryden.

To that recess, When purple light shall next suffuse the skies, With me repair.

Pope.

Instead of love-enliven'd cheeks, With flowing rapture bright, dark looks succeed, Suffus'd and glaring with untender fire.

Thomson.

SUFFUSION. n. s. [suffusion, Fr. from suffuse.]

1. The act of overspreading with any thing.

2. That which is suffused or spread.

A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs, Or dim suffusion veil'd.

Milton, P. L.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high, Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye; And when his chariot downward draws to bed, His ball is with the same suffusion red.

Dryden.

To those that have the jaundice or like suffusion of eyes, objects appear of that colour.

Ray.

SUG. n. s. [from sugo, Lat. to suck.] A small kind of worm.

Many have sticking on them sugs, or trout-lice, which is a kind of worm like a clove or pin, with a big head, and sticks close to him, and sucks his moisture.

Walton.

SUGAR.† n. s. [succe, Fr. saccharum, Lat. Dr. Johnson.—It has been traced to the Arabick succar, which is formed from the Pers. schachar. See Morin, in V. SUCRE.]

1. The native salt of the sugar-cane, obtained by the expression and evaporation of its juice.

Quincy.

All the blood of Zelmane's body stirred in her, as wine will do when sugar is hastily put into it.

Sidney.

Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine Their subtle essence with the soul of wine.

Crashaw.

A grocer in London gave for his rebus a sugar-loaf standing upon a flat steple.

Peacham.

Saccharum candidum shoots into angular figures, by placing a great many sticks across a vessel of liquid sugar.

Grew.

If the child must have sugar-plums when he has a mind, rather than be out of humour; why, when he is grown up, must he not be satisfied too with wine?

Locke.

In a sugar-baker's drying-room, where the air was heated fifty-four degrees beyond that of a human body, a sparrow died in two minutes.

Arbutnot on Air.

A piece of some geniculated plant, seeming to be part of a sugar-cane.

Woodward on Fossils.

2. Any thing proverbially sweet.

Your fair discourse has been as sugar, Making the hard way sweet and delectable.

Shakspeare.

3. A chymical dry crystallization.

Sugar of lead, though made of that insipid metal, and sour salt of vinegar, has in it a sweetness surpassing that of common sugar.

Boyle.

TO SUGAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To impregnate or season with sugar. Short thick sobs

In panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast, That ever-bubbling spring, the sugar'd nest Of her delicious soul, that there does lie, Bathing in streams of liquid melody.

Crashaw.

2. To sweeten.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself In general riot, and never learn'd The icy precepts of respect, but followed The sugar'd game before thee.

Shaks. Timon.

His glosing sire his errand daily said, And sugar'd speeches whisper'd in mine ear.

Fairfax.

Who casts out threats, no man deceives, But flattry still in sugar'd words betrays, And poison in high tasted meats conveys.

Denham.

SUGARCAN'DY.† n. s. [from sugar and candy.] Sugar candied, or crystallized. One poor pennyworth of sugar-candy.

Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 18.

TO SUGGEST. v. a. [suggero, suggestum, Latin; suggerer, Fr.]

1. To hint; to intimate; to insinuate good or ill; to tell privately.

Are you not asham'd?

What spirit suggests this imagination?

Shaks.

I could never have suffered greater calamities, by denying to sign that justice my conscience suggested to me. King Charles.

These Romish casuists speak peace to the consciences of men, by suggesting something to them, which shall satisfy their minds, notwithstanding a known, actual, avowed continuance of their sins. South.

Some ideas make themselves way, and are suggested to the mind by all the ways of sensation and reflexion. Locke.

Reflect upon the different state of the mind in thinking, which those instances of attention, reverie, and dreaming, naturally enough suggest. Locke.

Search for some thoughts thy own suggesting mind.

And others dictated by heavenly power, Shall rise spontaneous. Pope, Odyss.

2. To seduce; to draw to ill by insinuation. Out of use.

When devils will their blackest sins put on, They do suggest at first with heavenly sounds. Shakespeare.

Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested, I nightly lodge her in an upper tower. Shaks.

3. To inform secretly. Out of use.

We must suggest the people, in what hatred He still hath held them, that to 's power he would Have made them mules. Shaks. Coriol.

- SUGGESTER.† n. s. [from suggest.] One that remindeth another.

Some suborn'd suggester of these treasons, Believ'd in him by you. Beaumont and Fl. Bloody Brother.

The Spirit of God in person is not the immediate suggester of this conclusion. Bp. Bull, Works, lii. 885.

- SUGGESTION. n. s. [suggestion, Fr. from suggest.]

1. Private hint; intimation; insinuation; secret notification.

It allayeth all base and earthly cogitations, banisheth and driveth away those evil secret suggestions which our invisible enemy is always apt to minister. Hooker.

He was a man Of an unbounded stomach, even ranking Himself with princes: one that by suggestion Tied all the kingdom. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Native and untaught suggestions of inquisitive children. Locke.

Another way is letting the mind, upon the suggestion of any new notion, run after similes. Locke.

2. Secret incitement.

Arthur, they say, is kill'd to-night On your suggestion. Shakespeare, K. John.

To SUGGIL* v. a. [suggillo, Lat.] To defame; the Latin word has the same figurative meaning.

They will not shrink to offer their blood for the defence of Christ's verity, if it be openly impugned, or secretly suggilled. Abp. Parker, Strype Append. to his Life.

To SUGGILATE. v. a. [suggillo, Lat.]

To beat black and blue; to make livery by a bruise.

The head of the os humeri was bruised, and remained suggillated long after. Wiseman, Surgery.

SUICIDE. n. s. [suicidium, Lat.]

1. Self-murder; the horrid crime of destroying one's self.

Child of despair, and suicide my name. Savage. To be cut off by the sword of injured friendship is the most dreadful of all deaths, next to suicide. Richardson, Clarissa.

2. A self-murderer.

If fate forbears us, fancy strikes the blow, We make misfortune, suicides in woe. Young. SUILLAGE. n. s. [souillage, Fr.] Drain of filth. Obsolete.

When they have chosen the plot, and laid out the limits of the work, some Italians dig wells and cisterns, and other conveyances for the suillage of the house. Watton.

SUING. n. s. [This word seems to come from suer, to sweat, Fr. It is perhaps peculiar to Bacon.] The act of soaking through any thing.

Note the percolation or suing of the verjuice through the wood; for verjuice of itself would never have passed through the wood. Bacon.

SUIT.† n. s. [suite, Fr.]

1. A set; a number of things corresponding one to the other.

Those verses they deduc'd from those first golden times,

Of sundry sorts of feet, and sundry suits of rhimes. Dryden.

We, ere the day, two suits of armour sought, Which borne before him on his steed he brought. Dryden.

2. Clothes made one part to answer another.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-washed wits, is wonderful. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Him all reheate

For his device in handsoning a suit; To judge of lace, pink, panes, print, cut and plait,

Of all the court to have the best conceit. Donne.

Three or four suits one winter there does waste,

One suit does there three or four winters last. Cowley.

His majesty was supplied with three thousand suits of clothes, with good proportions of shoes and stockings. Clarendon.

3. Consecration; series; regular order.

Every five-and-thirty years the same kind and suite of weather comes about again; as great frost, great wet, great droughts, warm winters, summers with little heat; and they call it the prime. Bacon.

4. Out of SUITS. Having no correspondence. A metaphor, I suppose, from cards.

Wear this for me; one out of suits with fortune, That would give more, but that her hand lacks means. Shakespeare.

5. [Suite, Fr.] Retinue; company.

Plexirtus's ill-led life, and worse-gotten honour, should have tumbled together to destruction, had there not been in Tydeus and Telenor, with fifty in their suite to his defence. Sidney.

6. [From To sue.] A petition; an address of entreaty.

Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Shakespeare.

She gallops o'er a courtier's nose; And then dreams he of smelling out a suit. Shakespeare.

Had I a suit to Mr. Shallow, I would humour him men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakespeare.

Many shall make suit unto thee. Job, xi. 19.

My mind, neither with pride's itch, nor yet hath been Poison'd with love to see or to be seen; I had no suit there, nor new suit to shew: Yet went to court. Donne.

It will be as unreasonable to expect that God should attend and grant those suits of ours, which we do not at all consider ourselves. Whole Duty of Man.

7. Courtship.

He that hath the stevage of my course, Direct my suit. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Their determinations are to return to their home, and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition. Shakespeare.

8. In Spenser it seems to signify pursuit; prosecution. Dr. Johnson.—This is certainly an old usage of the word.

A keeper, which I knewe, [was] requir'd to follow a suite with hys bounds after one that hadde stolen a deere. Spenser.

Abp. Croomer, Ansv. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 198.

High amongst all knights hast hung thy shield, Thenceforth the suit of earthly conquest chooseth,

And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field. Spenser.

9. [In law.] Suit is sometimes put for the instance of a cause, and sometimes for the cause itself deduced in judgement. Ayliffe.

All that had any suits in law came unto them. Susanna.

Wars are suits of appeal to the tribunal of God's justice, where there are no superiors on earth to determine the cause. Bacon, War with Spain.

Involve not thyself in the suits and parties of great personages.—Dp. Taylor, Guide to Devot.

To Alibech alone refer your suit.

And let his sentence finish your dispute. Dryden.

A suit of law is not a thing unlawful in itself, but may be innocent, if nothing else comes in to make a sin thereof; but then it is our sin, and a matter of our account, when it is either upon an unjustifiable ground, or carried on by a sinful management. Kettwell.

John Bull was flattered by the lawyers that his suit would not last above a year, and that before that time he would be in quiet possession of his business. Arbutnot.

10. [In law also, from the old Fr. suit, "l'obligation de suivre les plaids de son seigneur. Les Anglois se servent encore de ce mot depuis Guillaume le Bâtard. 960." Lacombe.] Suit of court; suit-service; attendance of tenants at the court of their lord. See Cowel.

Then found he many missing of his crew, Which wont doe suit and service to his might. Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 34.

The matter and manner of their different educations and humours, that each would be improper in any other. Dryden.

2. To be fitted to; to become.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal, Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.

Her purple habit sits with such a grace On her smooth shoulders, and so suits her face. Dryden.

If different sects should give us a list of those innate practical principles, they would set down only such as suited their distinct hypotheses. Locke.

Raise her notes to that sublime degree,
Which suits a song of piety and thee. Prior.

3. To dress; to clothe.

Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he *suit*ed to his wat'ry tomb;
If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
Be better *suit*ed;
These weeds are memories of those worse hours;
I pry'thee put them off. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
I'll disrobe me
Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant. Shaks. Cymbeline.

To SUIT. v. n. To agree; to accord.

Dryden uses it both with to and with.
The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot suit with either; but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton, P. L.
The place itself was *suit*ing to his care,
Uncouth and savage as the cruel fair. Dryden.
Pity does with a noble nature suit. Dryden.
Constraint does ill with love and beauty suit. Dryden.

This he says, because it suits with his hypothesis, but proves it not. Locke.

That suits with me so ill; thou know'st my temper. Addison.

SUITABLE. adj. [from suit.] Fitting; according with; agreeable to; with to.

Through all those miseries, in both there appeared a kind of nobleness not suitable to that affliction. Sidney.

What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform, in manner suitable to their present and ancient state. Hooker.

To solemn acts of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty; are they only in religion a stain? Hooker.

It is very suitable to the principles of the Roman church; for why should not their science as well as service be in an unknown tongue? Tillotson.

As the blessings of God upon his honest industry had been great, so he was not without intentions of making suitable returns in acts of charity. Asterbury.

Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent, as more suitable;
A vile conceit in pompous words express'd,
Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd. Pope.

It is as great an absurdity to suppose holy prayers and divine petitions without an holiness of life suitable to them, as to suppose an holy and divine life without prayers. Law.

SUITABLENESS. n. s. [from suitable.] Fittingness; agreeableness.

In words and styles, suitableness makes them acceptable and effective. Glanville.

With ordinary minds, it is the suitableness, not the evidence of a truth that makes it to be yielded to; and it is seldom that any thing practically convinces a man that does not please him first. South.

He creates those sympathies and suitablenesses of nature that are the foundation of all true friendship, and by his providence brings persons so affected together. South.

Consider the laws themselves, and their suitableness or unsuitableness to those to whom they are given. Tillotson.

SUITABLY. adv. [from suitable.] Agreeably; according to.

Whosoever speaks upon an occasion may take any text suitably thereto; and ought to speak suitably to that text. South.

Some rank deity, whose filthy face
We suitably o'er stinking stables place. Dryden.

SUITER. n. s. [from suit.]

SUITOR. n. s. [from suit.]

1. One that sues; a petitioner; a supplicant.

As humility is in suitors a decent virtue, so the testification thereof, by such effectual acknowledgements, not only argueth a sound apprehension of his supereminent glory and majesty before whom we stand, but putteth also into his hands a kind of pledge or bond for security against our unthankfulness. Hooker.

She hath been a *suit*or to me for her brother,
Cut off by course of justice.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
My piteous soul began the wretchedness
Of suitors at court to mourn. Donne.

Not only bind thine own hands, but bind the hand of suitors also from offering. Bacon.

Yet their port
Not of mean suitors; nor important less
Seem'd their petition, than when the ancient pair,
Deucalion and chaste Pyrrha, to restore
The race of mankind drown'd, before the shrine
Of Themis stood devout. Milton, P. L.

I challenge nothing;
But I'm an humble *suit*or for these prisoners. Denham.

My lord, I come an humble *suit*or to you. Rowe.

2. A wooer; one who courts a mistress.

SULLEN.† adj. [Of this word the etymology is obscure. Dr. Johnson. —

The Icel. sollin, tumidus, livescens, has been offered as the etymon. See the Death-Song of Lodbrog, 1782. p. 54. But perhaps it may be referred to the Latin solus, solitary; whence our old word solein, used in that sense, and afterwards, by an easy application from place to person, transferred to a gloomy disposition, to persons morosely shunning the company of others. I consider therefore solitary as the primary meaning of the word, though Dr. Johnson has wholly overpassed it.]

1. Solitary.
It maketh me drawe out of the waie,
In soleyn place by myselfe. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

2. Gloomily angry; sluggishly discontented.

Rely on what thou hast of virtue, summon all.

Nor trumpets summon him to war,
Nor drums disturb his morning sleep.

We are summon'd in to profess repentance and amendment of all our sins.

Love, duty, safety, summon us away;
'Tis nature's voice, and nature we obey.

2. To excite; to call up; to raise; with up emphatical.

When the blast of war blows in our ears,
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood.

SUMMONER.† n. s. [from summon.] See SOMNER. Chaucer writes it sompnour, and others sumner. See Phillips's Dict.

One who cites; one who summons.

Close pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace. Shaks. L. Lear.
SUMMONS.† n. s. [from the verb. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the law-writ called a summoneas. See Pegge's Anecd. of the Engl. Lang. 2d edit. p. 173.] A call of authority; admonition to appear; citation.

What are you?
Your name, your quality, and why you answer
This present summons? Shaks. L. Lear.
He sent to summon the seditious, and to offer pardon; but neither summons nor pardon was any thing regarded. Hayward.

The sons of light
Hasted, resorting to the summons high,
And took their seats. Milton, P. L.
This summons, as he resolved unfit either to dispute, or disobey, so could he not, without much violence to his inclinations, submit unto.

Fell, Life of Hammond.
Strike your sails at summons, or prepare
To prove the last extremities of war. Dryden.

SUMP.* n. s. [sump, Su. Goth. palus.] A marsh; a swamp; a bog. Hence also sumpy, boggy, or wet. Both northern words. See Craven Dial. and Brackett.

SUMPTER. n. s. [sommier, Fr. somaro, Italian.] A horse that carries the clothes or furniture.

Return with her!
Persuade me rather to be a slave and sumpter
To this detested groom. Shaks. L. Lear.
With full force his deadly bow he bent,
And feather'd fates among the mules and sumpters sent. Dryden.
Sumpter mules, bred of large Flanders' mares.
Mortimer.

SUMPTION. n. s. [from sumptus, Lat.] The act of taking. Not in use.

The sumption of the mysteries does all in a capable subject. Bp. Taylor.

SUMPTUARY. adj. [sumptuarius, Lat.] Relating to expence; regulating the cost of life.

To remove that material cause of sedition, which is want and poverty in the estate, serveth
the opening and well-balancing of trade, the banishing of idleness, the repressing of waste and excess by sumptuary laws. Bacon.

SUMPTUOSITY. n. s. [from sumptuosus.]
Expensiveness; costliness. Not used.

He added sumptuosity, invented jewels of gold and stone, and some engines for the war. Raleigh.

SUMPTUOUS. adj. [sumptuosus, from sumptus, Latin.] Costly; expensive; splendid.

We see how most Christians stood then affected, how joyful they were to behold the sumptuous stateliness of houses built unto God's glory.

Hooker.
We are too magnificent and sumptuous in our tables and attendance. Atherbury.

SUMPTUOUSLY. adv. [from sumptuosus.]
1. Expensively; with great cost.

This monument five hundred years hath stood,
Which I have sumptuously re-edified.

Titus Andronicus.
Ethelwold, bishop of Winchester, in a famine, sold all the rich vessels and ornaments of the church, to relieve the poor with bread; and said, there was no reason that the dead temples of God should be sumptuously furnished, and the living temples suffer penury. Bacon, Apophthegms.

2. Splendidly.
A good employment may make you live tolerably in London, or sumptuously here. Swift.

SUMPTUOUSNESS. n. s. [from sumptuosus.]

I will not fall out with those that can reconcile sumptuousness and charity. Boyle.

SUN.† n. s. [sunno, Gothick; runna, runne, Saxon, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.
— Wachter concludes, that the word is certainly Arabick; viz. from sana, to shine; sena, splendour. "Quæ dum mecum perpendo, et quod Arabibus quoque sol feminini generis sit, non amplius dubito majores nostros, ante migrationem in occidentem, et nomen et genus solis ab Arabibus accepisse."
Wachter, in V. SONNE. The German word is of the feminine gender, as the Saxon is. And this distinction may be found in our old English. See Lib.
Fest. fol. 29. Mr. Harris, in his Hermes, has argued upon the masculine gender of the sun, without any knowledge of this curious circumstance in the history of language. See Herm. B. i. ch. 4.]

1. The luminary that makes the day.

Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,
Nor storms do turn? Sidney.
Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honeysuckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbidden the sun to enter. Shakspeare.

Though there be but one sun existing in the world, yet the idea of it being abstracted, so that more substances might each agree in it, it is as much a sort as if there were as many suns as there are stars. Locke.

By night, by day, from pole to pole they run;
Or from the setting seek the rising sun. Harte.

2. A sunny place; a place eminently warmed by the sun.

Yonder bank hath choice of sun and shade.
Milton, S. A.

3. Any thing eminently splendid.

I will never consent to put out the sun of sovereignty to posterity, and all succeeding kings.
King Charles.

4. Under the SUN. In the world. A proverbial expression.

There is no new thing under the sun. Ecc. i. 9.

To SUN. v. a. [from the noun.] To insolate; to expose to the sun; to warm in the sun.

The cry to shady delve him brought at last,
Where Mammon earst did sun his treasury.
Spenser.

What aim'st thou at? delicious fare;
And then to sun thyself in open air.

Dryden, Pers.
SUNBEAM.† n. s. [sun and beam; Sax.
runnebeam. The old poets have usually placed the accent on the last syllable.]
Ray of the sun.

The Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spungy south to this part of the west, Vanish'd in the sunbeams. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Gliding through the ev'n

On a sunbeam. Milton, P. L.
There was a God, a being distinct from this visible world; and this was a truth wrote with a sunbeam, legible to all mankind, and received by universal consent. South.

SUNBEAT.† part. adj. [sun and beat.] Shone on fiercely by the sun.

As sun-beat snow so let them thaw.

Sandys, Ps. p. 91.
Its length runs level with the Atlantick main,
And wears fruitful Nilus to convey

His sunbeat waters by so long a way. Dryden, Juu.

SUNBRIGHT. adj. [sun and bright.] Resembling the sun in brightness.

Gathering up himself out of the mire,
With his uneven wings did fiercely fall
Upon his sunbright shield. Spenser.

Now would I have thee to my tutor:
How and which way I may bestow myself,
To be regarded in her sunbright eye. Shakspeare.

High in the midst, exalted as a god,
The apostate in his sunbright chariot sat,
Idol of majesty divine! inclos'd
With flaming cherubims, and golden shields.

Milton, P. L.
To SUNBURN.* v. a. [sun and burn.] To discolour or scorch by the sun.

The tumults and arms did sunburn its beauty,
although they did not wholly blast and burn it.
Bp. Gauden, Anti-Baal-Berith, (1661,) p. 179.

SUNBURNING. n. s. [sun and burning.] The effect of the sun upon the face.

If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sunburning, let thine eye
be thy cook. Shakspeare.

The heat of the sun may darken the colour of the skin, which we call sunburning. Boyle.

SUNBURNT. part. adj. [sun and burnt.]

1. Tanned; discoloured by the sun.

Where such radiant lights have shone,
No wonder if her cheeks be grown

Sunburnt with lustre of her own. Cleaveland.
Sunburnt and swarthy though she be,
She'll fire for winter nights provide. Dryden.

One of them, older and more sunburnt than the rest, told him he had a widow in his line of life.

Addison.

2. Scorched by the sun.

How many nations of the sunburnt soil
Does Niger bless? how many drink the Nile?
Blackmore.

SUNCLAD.† part. adj. [sun and clad.]
Clothed in radiance; bright.

To him, that dares
Arm his profane tongue with contemptuous words
Against the sun-clad power of Chastity, Fain would I something say. Milton, Comus.

SUNDAY.† n. s. [sun and day; Sax. run- nan-bea, the day of the sun.] The day anciently dedicated to the sun; the first day of the week; the Christian sabbath.

If thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke,
wear the print of it, and sigh away Sundays.

Shakspeare.
An's she were not kin to me, she would be as fain on Friday as Helen is on Sunday.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.
At prime they enter'd on the Sunday morn;
Rich tap'stry spread the streets. Dryden.

Our ardent labours for the toys we seek,
Join night to day, and Sunday to the week. Young.

To SUNDER. v. a. [sun and der, Sax.] To part; to separate; to divide.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunderd friends greet in the hour of death.

Shakspeare.
It is sunderd from the main land by a sandy plain. Carew.

She that should all parts to reunion bow,
She that had all magnetic force alone,
To draw and fasten sunderd parts in one. Donne.

A sunderd clock is piecemeal laid,
Not to be lost, but by the maker's hand
Republish'd, without error then to stand. Donne.

When both the chiefs are sunder'd from the fight,
Then to the lawful king restore his right. Dryden.

The enormous weight was cast,
Which Crantor's body sunder'd at the waist.

Dryden.
Bears, tigers, wolves, the lion's angry brood,
Whom heaven endu'd with principles of blood,
He wisely sunder'd from the rest, to yell

In forests. Dryden.

Bring me the lightning, give me thunder;
— Jove may kill, but ne'er shall sunder. Granville.

SUNDEW. n. s. [ros solis, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.
SUNDIAL. n. s. [sun and dial.] A marked place on which the shadow points the hour.

All your graces no more you shall have,
Than a sundial in a grave. Donne.
The body, though it really moves, yet not changing perceivable distance, seems to stand still; as is evident in the shadows of sundials. Locke.
SUNDRIED.* part. adj. [sun and dry.] Dried by the heat of the sun.

The building is of sun-dried brick. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 162.
SUNDRY.† adj. [runþer, Sax. sundr, Goth. from to sunder. See also ASUNDER.] Several; more than one.

That law, which, as it is laid up in the bosom of God, we call eternal, receiveth, according unto the different kind of things which are subject unto it, different and sundry kinds of names. Hooker.
Not of one nation was it peopled, but of sundry people of different manners. Spenser.
But, dwelling in this place so long, why dost thou dally,
So many sundry things here having yet to tell? Drayton.

He caused him to be arrested upon complaint of sundry grievous oppressions. Davies.
How can she several bodies know,
If in herself a body's form she bear?
How can a mirror sundry faces show,
If from all shapes and forms it be not clear? Davies.

I have composed sundry collects, as the Adventual, Quadragesimal, Paschal or Pentecostal. Sanderson.

Sundry foes the rural realm surround. Dryden.

He thrice happy on the sunless seclines,
Beneath the whole collected shade reclines. Thomson.

SUNLIKE.† adj. [sun and like.] Resembling the sun.

She came, as if Aurora fair
Out of the East had newly made repair,
Making a sun-like light with golden shine
Of her bright beauty in the gazers' eye. Mir. for Mag. p. 781.

The quantity of light in this bright luminary, and in the sunlike fixt stars, must be continually decreasing. Cheyne.

SUNLIGHT.* n. s. [sun and light.] The light of the sun.

Where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad. Milton, P. L.

SUNNY. adj. [from sun.]

1. Resembling the sun; bright.
She saw Duessa, sunny-bright,
Adorn'd with gold and jewels shining clear. Spenser.

The eldest, that Fidelia hight,
Like sunny beams threw from her crystal face. Spenser.

My decay'd fair
A sunny look of his would soon repair. Shaksp.
The chemist feeds
Perpetual flames, whose unrestrained force
O'er sand and ashes and the stubborn flint
Prevailing, turns into a fusile sea,
That in his furnace bubbles sunny red. Philips.

2. Exposed to the sun; bright with the sun.

About me round I saw
Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
And liquid lapse of morn'ring streams. Milton, P. L.

Him walking on a sunny hill he found. Milton, P. R.
The filmy gossamer now flits no more,
Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore. Dryden.

But what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains and her sunny shores,
With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,
While proud oppression in her vallies reigns,
And tyranny usurps her happy plains? Addison.

3. Coloured by the sun.

Her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece. Shaksp.
SUNPROOF.* adj. [sun and proof.] Impervious to sunlight.

In those days the giants of Libanus mastered all nations, from the sunrising to the sunset. Raleigh, Hist.

SUNSET. n. s. [sun and set.]

1. Close of the day; evening.
When the sun sets the air doth drizzle dew;
But for the sunset of my brother's son
It rains downright. Shakespeare.

The stars are of greater use than for men to gaze on after sunset. Raleigh.
At sunset to their ship they make return,
And none secure on deck till rosy morn. Dryden.

He now, observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sunset of thy various day. Pope.

2. West.

SUNSHINE.† n. s. [sun and shine; Sax. run-þcin. Milton accents it on the last syllable; and so sunshiny was formerly accented on the second.] Action of the sun; place where the heat and lustre of the sun are powerful.

That man that sits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,
Would he abuse the countenance of the king,
Alack, what mischiefs might be set abroad,
In shadow of such greatness! Shaks. Hen. IV.

He had been many years in that sunshine, when a new comet appeared in court. Clarendon.

Sight no obstacle found here, nor shade,
But all sunshine, as when his beams at noon
Culminate from the equator. Milton, P. L.

I that in his absence
Blaz'd like a star of the first magnitude,
Now in his brighter sunshine am not seen. Denham, Sophy.

Nor can we this weak shower a tempest call,
But drops of heat that in the sunshine fall. Dryden.

The more favourable you are to me, the more distinctly I see my faults: spots and blemishes are never so plainly discovered as in the brightest sunshine. Pope.

SUNSHINE. } adj. [from sunshine. It was SUNSHINY. } adverbially accented on the second syllable.]

1. Bright with the sun.
About ten in the morning, in sunshiny weather, we took several sorts of paper stained. Boyle.

The cases prevent the bees getting abroad upon every sunshine day. Mortimer, Husb.

2. Bright like the sun.
The fruitful-headed beard, amaz'd
At flashing beams of that sunshiny shield,
Became stark blind, and all his senses daz'd,
That down he tumbled. Spenser.

To SUP. v. a. [super, Norman French; rupan, Saxon; soepen, Dutch.] To drink by mouthfuls; to drink by little at a time; to sip.

Then took the angry witch her golden cup,
Which still she bore replete with magic arts,
Death and despair did many thereof sup. Spenser.

There I'll find a purer air
To feed my life with; there I'll sup
Balm and nectar in my cup. Crashaw.

We saw it smelling to every thing set in the room, and when it had smelt to them all, it supped up the milk. Ray.

He call'd for drink; you saw him sup
Potable gold in golden cup. Swift.

To SUP. v. n. [souper, French.] To eat the evening meal.

You'll sup with me?
— Anger's my meat; I sup upon myself,
And so shall starve with feeding. Shaks. Coriol.
When they had supped, they brought Tobias in. Tobias.

The least transgression of your's, if it be only two bits and one sup more than your stint, is a great debauch. Swift.

Long custom of sinning superinduces upon the soul new and absurd desires, like the distemper of the soul, feeding only upon filth and corruption.

South.

2. To bring on as a thing not originally belonging to that on which it is brought.

Relation is not contained in the real existence of things, but something extraneous and superinduced.

Locke.

In children, savages, and ill-natured people, learning not having cast their native thoughts into new moulds, nor by superinducing foreign doctrines, confounded those fair characters nature had written, their innate notions might lie open. Locke.

SUPERINDUCTION. n. s. [from superinduce.] The act of superinducing.

A good inclination is but the first rude draught of virtue; the superinduction of ill habits quickly defaces it.

South.

SUPERINJECTION. n. s. [super and injection.] An injection succeeding another.

Dict.

To SUPERINSPECT.* v. a. [super and inspect.] To overlook; to oversee.

Maydman, Naval Spec. (1691), p. 123.

SUPERINSTITUTION. n. s. [super and institution.] In law.] One institution upon another; as if A be instituted and admitted to a benefice upon a title, and B be instituted and admitted by the presentation of another.

Bailey.

To SUPERINTEND. v. a. [super and tend.] To oversee; to overlook; to take care of others with authority.

The king will appoint a council, who may superintend the works of this nature, and regulate what concerns the colonies. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

This argues design, and a superintending wisdom, power, and providence in this special business of food.

Derham.

Angels, good or bad, must be furnished with prodigious knowledge, to oversee Persia and Grecia of old; or if any such superintend the affairs of Great Britain now.

Watts.

SUPERINTENDENCE. n. s. [from super and intendence.] intend. Superiour care; the act of overseeing with authority.

Such an universal superintendency has the eye and hand of Providence over all, even the most minute and inconsiderable things.

South.

The Divine Providence, which hath a visible respect to the being of every man, is yet more observable in its superintendency over societies.

Grew.

An admirable indication of the divine superintendence and management.

Derham.

SUPERINTENDENT. n. s. [superintendant, Fr. from superintend.] One who overlooks others authoritatively.

Our new superintendentes and ministers.

Martin, Marr. of Pr. (1550), i. iii. b.

The world pays a natural veneration to men of virtue, and rejoice to see themselves conducted by those who act under the care of a Supreme Being, and who think themselves accountable to the great Judge and Superintendent of human affairs.

Addison.

SUPERINTENDENT.* adj. Overlooking others with authority.

Next to Brama, one Deuendre is the superintendent deity, who hath many more under him.

Stillingfleet.

SUPERIORITY. n. s. [from superiour.] Preminence; the quality of being greater or higher than another in any respect.

Bellarmino makes the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superiour; but he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it; whereas mere excellency without superiority doth not require any subjection, but only estimation.

Stillingfleet.

The person who advises, does in that particular exercise a superiority over us, thinking us defective in our conduct or understanding. Addison, Spect.

SUPERIOUR. adj. [superieur, Fr. superior, Lat.]

1. Higher; greater in dignity or excellency; preferable or preferred to another.

In commending another, you do yourself right; for he that you commend is either superiour to you in that you commend, or inferior; if he be inferior, if he be to be commended, you much more; if he be superiour, if he be not to be commended, you much less glorious.

Bacon.

Although superior to the people, yet not superior to their own voluntary engagements once passed from them.

Ep. Taylor.

Heaven takes part with the oppressed, and tyrants are upon their behaviour to a superior power.

L'Estrange.

Superior beings above us, who enjoy perfect happiness, are more steadily determined in their choice of good than we, and yet they are not less happy or less free than we are.

Locke.

He laughs at men of far superior understandings to his, for not being as well dressed as himself.

Swift.

2. Upper; higher locally.

By the refraction of the second prism, the breadth of the image was not increased, but its superior part, which in the first prism suffered the greater refraction, and appeared violet and blue, did again in the second prism suffer a greater refraction than its inferior part, which appeared red and yellow.

Newton, Opt.

3. Free from emotion or concern; unconquered; unaffected.

From amidst them forth he pass'd,
Long way through hostile scorn; which he sustain'd

Superiour, nor of violence fear'd ought.

Milton, P. L.

Here passion first I felt,
Commotion strange! in all enjoyments else
Superiour and unmov'd.

Milton, P. L.

There is not in earth a spectacle more worthy than a great man superiour to his sufferings.

Addison, Spect.

SUPERIOUR. n. s. One more excellent or dignified than another.

Those under the great officers of state have more frequent opportunities for the exercise of benevolence than their superiours.

Addison, Spect.

SUPERLATIUM. n. s. [superlatio, Lat.] Exaltation of any thing beyond truth or propriety.

There are words that as much raise a style as others can depress it; superlatum and overmuchness amplifies: it may be above faith, but not above a mean.

B. Jonson.

SUPERLATIVE. adj. [superlatif, Fr. superlativus, Latin.]

1. Implying or expressing the highest degree.

It is an usual way to give the superlative unto things of eminence; and when a thing is very great, presently to define it to be the greatest of all.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Some have a violent and turgid manner of talking and thinking; they are always in extremes, and pronounce concerning every thing in the superlative.

Watts.

2. Rising to the highest degree.

The high court of parliament in England is superlative.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Martyrdoms I reckon amongst miracles, because they seem to exceed the strength of human nature; and I may do the like of superlative and admirable holiness.

Bacon.

The generality of its reception is with many the persuating argument of its superlative desert; and common judges measure excellency by numbers.

Glanville.

Ingratitude and compassion never cohabit in the same breast; which shews the superlative malignity of this vice, and the baseness of the mind in which it dwells.

South.

SUPERLATIVELY. adv. [from superlative.]

1. In a manner of speech expressing the highest degree.

I shall not speak superlatively of them; but that I may truly say, they are second to none in the Christian world.

Bacon.

2. In the highest degree.

Tiberius was bad enough in his youth; but superlatively and monstrously so in his old age.

South.

The Supreme Being is a spirit most excellently glorious, superlatively powerful, wise, and good, Creator of all things.

Bentley.

SUPERLATIVENESS. n. s. [from superlative.] The state of being in the highest degree.

SUPERLUNAR.† adj. [super and luna.] SUPERLUNARY. n. Not sublunary; placed above the moon; not of this world.

The mind, in metaphysics, at a loss,
May wander in a wilderness of moss;
The head that turns at superlunary things,
Pois'd with a tail, may steer on Wilkins' wings.

Pope.

Other ambition than of crowns in air,
And superlunary felicities,
Thy bosom warms.

Young, Night Th. 6.

SUPERNACULUM.* n. s. ["vox hybrida, ex Lat. præpositio super (upon) et Germ. nagel (a nail) composita; quibus nova vocabula fingendi Anglis potissimum usitatus est, vocemque supernaculi apud eosdem produxit." De Supernaculo Anglorum, 4to. Lips. 1746, p. 8. Cited by Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 239. Mr. Brand, however, has produced no instance of the use of this word by any English writer, except Grose's definition of it; to which he has added an explanation translated from the Latin book already named. Dr. King, of facetious memory, I may add, will confirm it.] Good liquor, of which there is not even a drop sufficient to wet one's nail.

Grose.

To drink supernaculum was an ancient custom not only in England, but also in several other parts of Europe, of emptying the cup or glass, and then pouring the drop or two that remained at the bottom upon the person's nail that drank it, to shew that he was no flincher.

Brand.

I saw some sparks as they were drinking,
With mighty mirth, and little thinking;
Their jests were supernaculum,
I snatch'd the rubies from each thumb;
And in this crystal have 'em here.

King, Miscell. p. 385.

SUPERNAL. adj. [supernus, Lat.]

1. Having an higher position; locally above us.

By heaven and earth was meant the solid matter and substance, as well of all the heavens and orb supernal, as of the globe of the earth, and waters which covered it. Raleigh.

2. Relating to things above; placed above; celestial; heavenly.

That supernal Judge that stirs good thoughts
In any breast of strong authority,
To look into the blots and stains of right.

Shakespeare.

He with frequent intercourse

Thither will send his winged messengers,
On errands of supernal grace.

Milton, P. L.
Both glorying to have 'scap'd the Stygian flood,
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength,
Not by the suff'rance of supernal pow'r.

Milton, P. L.

SUPERNATANT. adj. [supernatans, Lat.] Swimming above.

Whilst the substance continued fluid, I could shake it with the supernatant menstrum, without making between them any true union. Boyle.

SUPERNATA'TION. n. s. [from supernato, Lat.] The act of swimming on the top of any thing.

Touching the supernatation of bodies, take of aquafortis two ounces, of quicksilver two drams, the dissolution will not bear a flint as big as a nutmeg.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Bodies are differentiated by supernatation, as floating on water; for crystal will sink in water, as carrying in its own bulk a greater ponderosity than the space of any water it doth occupy; and will therefore only swim in molten metal and quick-silver. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SUPERNATURAL. adj. [super and natural.] Being above the powers of nature.

There resteth either no way unto salvation, or if any, then surely a way which is supernatural, a way which could never have entered into the heart of a man, as much as once to conceive or imagine, if God himself had not revealed it extraordinarily;
for which cause we term it the mystery or secret way of salvation. Hooker.

When supernatural duties are necessarily exacted, natural are not rejected as needless. Hooker.

The understanding is secured by the perfection of its own nature, or by supernatural assistance. Tillotson.

No man can give any rational account how it is possible that such a general food should come, by any natural means. And if it be supernatural, that grants the thing I am proving, namely, such a Supreme Being as can alter the course of nature.

Wilkins.

What mists of providence are these,
Through which we cannot see?
So saints by supernatural power set free
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.

SUPERNATURALLY. adv. [from supernatural.] In a manner above the course or power of nature.

The Son of God came to do every thing in miracle, to love supernaturally, and to pardon infinitely, and even to lay down the Sovereign while he assumed the Saviour. South.

SUPERNUMERARY. adj. [supernumerary, Fr. super and numerus, Lat.] Being above a stated, a necessary, an usual, or a round number.

Well if thrown out by a supernumerary
To my just number found! Milton, P. L.

In sixty-three years there may be lost eighteen days, omitting the intercalation of one day every fourth year, allowed for this quadrant or six hours supernumerary. Brown.

The odd or supernumerary six hours are not accounted in the three years after the leap year.
Holder.

Besides occasional and supernumerary addresses,
Hammond's certain perpetual returns exceeded
David's seven times a-day. Fell.

The produce of this tax is adequate to the services for which it is designed, and the additional tax is proportioned to the supernumerary expence this year. Addison, Freeholder.

Antiochus began to augment his fleet; but the Roman senate ordered his supernumerary vessels to be burnt. Arbuthnot.

A supernumerary canon is one who does not receive any of the profits or emoluments of the church, but only lives and serves there on a future expectation of some prebend. Ayliffe.

pondero, Latin.] To weigh over and above. Dict.

TO SUPERPRAISE.* v. a. [super and praise.] To praise beyond measure.

To vow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,
When I am sure you hate me with your hearts.

Shakespeare, Mids. Night's Dream.

SUPERPRO'PORTION. n. s. [super and pro-portio, Lat.] Overplus of proportion.

No defect of velocity, which requires as great a superproportion in the cause, can be overcome in an instant. Digby.

SUPERPURA'TION. n. s. [superpurgation,
Fr. super and purgation.] More purgation than enough.

There happening a superpurgation, he declined the repeating of that purge. Wiseman, Surgery.

SUPERREFLEXION. n. s. [super and reflexion.] Reflexion of an image reflected.

Place one glass before and another behind, you shall see the glass behind with the image within the glass before, and again the glass before in that,
and divers such superreflexions, till the species speciel at last die. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

SUPERSA'LIENCY. n. s. [super and salio, Lat.]
This were better written supersaliency.
The act of leaping upon any thing.

Their coition is by supersaliency, like that of horses. Brown.

TO SUPERSCRIBE. v. a. [super and scribo, Lat.] To inscribe upon the top or outside.

Fabretti and others believe, that by the two fortunes were only meant in general the goddess who sent prosperity or afflictions, and produce in their behalf an ancient monument, superscribed. Addison.

SUPERSCRIPTI'ON. n. s. [super and scriptio,
Lat.]

1. The act of superscribing.
2. That which is written on the top or outside.

Both this churlish superscription
Portend some alteration in good will.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Read me the superscription of these letters; I know not which is which. Shakespeare, Timon.

No superscriptions of fame,
Of honour or good name. Suckling.

I learn of my experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are who friends
Bear in their superscription; in prosperous days
They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head.

Milton, S. A.

It is enough her stone
May honour'd be with superscription
Of the sole lady, who had pow'r to move
The great Northumberland. Waller.

SUPERSECULAR.* adj. [super and secular.]
Above the world.

Let us, saith he, celebrate this feast, not in a panegyric but divine, not in a worldly but super-secular manner. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 302.

TO SUPERSEDE. v. a. [super and sedeo,
Latin.] To make void or inefficacious by superiour power; to set aside.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore in its present workings not controulable by reason; for as much as the proper effect of it is, for the time, to supersede the workings of reason.

South.

In this genuine acceptance of chance, nothing is supposed that can supersede the known laws of natural motion. Bentley.

SUPERSEDEAS. n. s. [In law.] Is a writ which lieth in divers and sundry cases; in all which it signifies a command or request to stay or forbear the doing of that which in appearance of law were to be done, were it not for the cause whereupon the writ is granted:

for example, a man regularly is to have surety of peace against him of whom he will swear that he is afraid; and the justice required hereunto cannot deny him: yet if the party be formerly bound to the peace, in Chancery or elsewhere, this writ lieth to stay the justice from doing that, which otherwise he might not deny. Cowel.

The far distance of this county from the court hath afforded it a supersedeas from takers and pur-veyours. Carew.

SUPERSE'VICEABLE. adj. [super and serviceable.] Over officious; more than is necessary or required.

A glass-gazing, superserviceable, finical rogue.
Shakespeare.

SUPERSTITION. n. s. [superstition, Fr.
superstitio, Lat.]

1. Unnecessary fear or scruples in religion; observance of unnecessary and uncommanded rites or practices; religion without morality.

A rev'rent fear, such superstition reigns
Among the rude, ev'n then possess'd the swains.

Dryden.

2. Rite or practice proceeding from scrupulous or timorous religion. In this sense it is plural.

They the truth

With superstitions and traditions taint.

Milton, P. L.

If we had a religion that consisted in absurd superstitions, that had no regard to the perfection of our nature, people might well be glad to have some part of their life excused from it. Law.

3. False religion; reverence of beings not proper objects of reverence; false worship.

They had certain questions against him of their own superstition. Acts, xxv. 19.

4. Over-nicety; exactness too scrupulous.
SUPERSTITIONIST.* n. s. [from superstition.] One who is addicted to superstition.

Our Saviour certainly conceived high ignoration and sorrow in his heart, while he observed that scorn and contempt those blind superstitionists, the Jews, bore against the poor despised Gentiles,
in thus profaning their place of worship.

More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 417.
Every vain-glorious superstitionist, that would make a show in the flesh. More, ut sup. p. 495.

SUPERSTITIOUS.† adj. [superstiticus, Fr.
superstitiosus, Latin.]

1. Addicted to superstition; full of idle fancies or scruples with regard to religion.

At the kindling of the fire, and lighting of candles, they say certain prayers, and use some other superstitious rites, which shew that they honour the fire and the light. Spenser.

Nature's own work it seem'd, nature taught art, And to a superstitious eye the haunt Of wood-gods and wood-nymphs. Milton, P. R.

A venerable wood,

Where rites divine were paid, whose holy hair Was kept and cut with superstitious care. Dryden.

2. Over accurate; scrupulous beyond need.

Have I with all my full affections Still met the king? lov'd him next heaven? obey'd him?

Been out of fondness superstitious to him?

And am I thus rewarded? Shaks. Hen. VIII.

- SUPERSTITIOUSLY. adv.* [from superstitious.]

1. In a superstitious manner; with erroneous religion.

There reigned in this island a king, whose memory of all others we most adore; not superstitiously, but as a divine instrument. Bacon.

2. With too much care.

Neither of these methods should be too scrupulously and superstitiously pursued. Watts, Logick.

- SUPERSTITIOUSNESS. n. s.* [from superstition.] The state of being superstitious.

Rememberance also hys prynces pleasure, which hath wylled all superstyciousnesse to be taken away from the ceremonies.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543.) fol. 22.

- To SUPERSTRAIN. v. a. [super and strain.] To strain beyond the just stretch.

In the straining of a string, the further it is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note.

Bacon.

- To SUPERSTRUCT. v. a. [superstru, superstructus, Latin.] To build upon any thing.

Two notions of fundamentals may be conceived, one signifying that whereon our eternal bliss is immediately superstructed, the other whereon our obedience to the faith of Christ is founded.

Hammond.

If his habit of sin have not corrupted his principles, the vicious Christian may think it reasonable to reform, and the preacher may hope to superstruct good life upon such a foundation.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

This is the only proper basis on which to superstruct first innocence, and then virtue.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

- SUPERSTRUCTURE. n. s.* [from superstruct.]

An edifice raised on any thing.

Trees sprout not cross like dry and sapless beams; nor do spars and tiles spring with a natural uniformity into a roof, and that out of stone and mortar: these are not the works of nature, but superstructures and additions to her, as the supplies of art. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

I want not to improve the honour of the living by impairing that of the dead; and my own profession hath taught me not to erect new superstructures upon an old ruin. Denham.

- SUPERSTRUCTIVE. adj.* [from superstruct.] Built upon something else.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, must necessarily resolve, that what were drunkenness in another, is not so in him, and nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructure, be it never so gross. Hammond.

- SUPERSTRUCTURE. n. s.* [super and structure.] That which is raised or built upon something else.

He who builds upon the present, builds upon the narrow compass of a point; and where the foundation is so narrow, the superstructure cannot be high and strong too. South.

Purgatory was not known in the primitive church, and is a superstructure upon the Christian religion. Tillotson.

You have added to your natural endowments the superstructures of study. Dryden.

- SUPERSUBSTANTIAL. adj.* [super and substantial.] More than substantial.

- SUPERVACANEOUS. n. s.* [supervacaneus, Latin.] Superfluous; needless; unnecessary; serving to no purpose.

Dict.

Having in my former letters made a flying progress through the European world, and taken a view of the several languages, dialects, and subdialects, whereby people converse with one another; and being now wind-bound for Africa, I held it not altogether supervacaneous to take a review of them. Howell, Lett. (dat. 1630.) ii. 60.

- SUPERVACANEOUSLY. adv.* [from the adjective.] Needless.

- SUPERVACANEOUSNESS. n. s.* [from the adjective.] Needlessness. Bailey.

- To SUPERVENE. v. n. [supervenio, Lat.] To come as an extraneous addition.

His good-will, when placed on any, was so fixed and rooted, that even supervening vice, to which he had the greatest detestation imaginable, could not easily remove it. Felt, Life of Hammond.

Such a mutual gravitation can never supervene to matter, unless impressed by a divine power.

Bentley.

- SUPERVENIENT. adj.* [superveniens, Lat.] Added; additional.

If it were unjust to murder John, the superveniens oath did not extenuate the fact, or oblige the juror unto it. Brown.

That branch of belief was in him superveniens to Christian practice, and not all Christian practice built on that. Hammond.

- SUPERVENE. n. s.* [from supervene.] The act of supervening.

An espousal contract may be broken off by the supervention of a legal kindred, inspected.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

- To SUPERVISE. v. a. [super and visus, Latin.] To overlook; to oversee; to intend.

The small time I supervised the glass-house, I got among those Venetians some smatterings of the Italian tongue. Howell, Lett. (dat. 1618.) i. 1. 3.

M. Bayle speaks of the vexation of the supervising of the press in terms so feeling that they move compassion. Congreve.

- SUPERVISE. n. s.* [from the verb.] Inspection. Not in use.

That on the supervise, no leisure bated, No, not to stay the grinding of the axe, My head should be struck off. Shaks. Hamlet.

- SUPERVISION. n. s.* [from supervise.] Act of supervising.

I have a confused remembrance of having seen an old donation, for the sustenance of a perpetual lamp to burn before the high-altar in the royal chapel at Islip, under the trust and supervision of the abbots of Westminster.

Warion, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 17.

- SUPERVISOR. n. s.* [from supervise.] An overseer; an inspector; a superintendent.

A supervisor may signify an overseer of the poor, an inspector of the customs, a surveyor of the highways, a supervisor of the excise. Watts, Logick.

How satisfy'd, my lord!

Would you be supervisor, grossly gape on?

Shakspeare.

I am informed of the author and supervisors of this pamphlet. Dryden.

- To SUPERVIVE. v. n. [super and vivo.] To overlive; to outlive.

Upon what principle can the soul be imagined to be naturally mortal, or what revolutions in nature will it not be able to resist and superlive? Clarke.

- SUPINATION. n. s.* [supination, Fr. from supino, Lat.]

1. The act of lying, or state of being laid with the face upward.

2. In anatomy, the position of the hand, in which the palm is lifted upwards, or exposed.

They [the muscles] can perform—flexion, extension, pronation, supination, the tonic motion, circumgation; and all these with so great expedition and agility, that they are much sooner done than said, yea as soon done as thought on.

Smith on Old Age, p. 62.

- SUPINE. n. s.* [supinus, Latin.] Our word is apparently of no great age by the examples. It is noticed in Bagwell's Mystery of Astronomy, published in 1655, as requiring explanation, in its sense of negligent or careless.

1. Lying with the face upward: opposed to prone.

Upon these divers positions in man, wherein the spine can only be at right lines with the thigh, arise those remarkable postures, prone, supine, and erect.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

At him he lanc'd his spear, and pierc'd his breast;

On the hard earth the Lycian knock'd his head, And lay supine; and forth the spirit fled. Dryden.

What advantage hath a man by this erection above other animals, the faces of most of them being more supine than ours? Ray on the Creation.

2. Leaning backwards with exposure to the sun.

If the vine,

On rising ground be plac'd, or hills supine, Extend thy loose battalions. Dryden.

- SUPINELY. adv.* [from supine.]

1. With the face upward.

2. Drowsily; thoughtlessly; indolently. Who on the beds of sin supinely lie, They in the summer of their age shall die. Sandys.

The old imprison'd king, Whose lenity first pleas'd the gaping crowd; But when long try'd, and found supinely good, Like Æsop's log, they leapt upon his back. Dryden.

He panting on thy breast supinely lies,
While with thy heavenly form he feeds his famish'd eyes. Dryden, Luc.

Wilt thou then repine
To labour for thyself? or rather choose
To lie supinely, hoping Heaven will bless Thy slighted fruits, and give thee bread unearn'd? Philips.

Beneath a verdant laurel's shade,
Horace, immortal bard! supinely laid. Prior.

SUPINENESS. n. s. [from supine.]

1. Posture with the face upward.

2. Drowsiness; carelessness; indolence.

When this door is open to let Dissenters in, considering their industry and our supineness, they may in a very few years grow to a majority in the house of commons. Swift.

SUPINITY. n. s. [from supine.]

1. Posture of lying with the face upwards.

2. Carelessness; indolence; thoughtlessness.

The fourth cause of error is a supinity or neglect of enquiry, even in matters wherein we doubt, rather believing than going to see.

SUPPAGE.* n. s. [from To sup.] Brown, Vulg. Err.
What may be supped; pottage.

Their tables, when they gave themselves to fasting, had not that usual furniture of such dishes as do cherish blood with blood; but for food they had bread; for suppage, salt; and for sauce, herbs.

SUPPALPATION.* n. s. [from suppalpor, Lat. to wheedle.] Act of enticing by soft words.

Let neither bugs of fear, nor suppalpations of favour, weaken your hands.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.
Thou art a courtier, and hast laid a plot to rise; if obsequious servility to the great; if those gifts in the bosom, which our blunt ancestors would have termed bribes; if plausible suppalpations, if restless importunities will boise thee; will mount!

Seasonable Sermon. (1644), p. 30.

TO SUPPARASITE.* v. a. [supparasitor, Lat.] To flatter; to cajole.

See how this subtle cunning sophister supparasites the people; that's ambition's fashion too, ever to be popular.

Dr. Clarke's Sermon. (1637), p. 245.

SUPPARASITATION.* n. s. [from the verb.] The act of flattering or paying servile court to.

Here cozening in bargains, there breaking of promises; here perfidious underminings, there flattering supparasitations.

Bp. Hall, Fast Sermon. (1628.)

SUPPEDA'NEOUS. adj. [sub and pes, Lat.] Placed under the feet.

He had slender legs, but increased by riding after meals; that is, the humour descended upon their pendulosity, they having no support or suppedaneous stability.

Brown.

TO SUPPEDITATE.* v. a. [suppedito, Lat.] To supply.

Those things there is a logical possibility for us to do, and strength sufficient suppeditated.

Hammond, Works, iv. 572.

Whosoever is able to suppeditate all things to the sufficing of all must have an infinite power.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

SUPPER. n. s. [souper, Fr. See SUP.]

The last meal of the day; the evening repast.

To-night we hold a solemn supper. Shakespeare.

I'll to my book:

For yet, ere super-time, must I perform

Much business. Shakespeare, Tempest.

The hour of supper comes unearn'd.

Milton, P. L.
His physicians, after his great fever that he had in Oxford, required him to eat suppers. Fell.
SUPPERLESS. adj. [from supper.] Wanting supper; fasting at night.

Suppose a man's going supperless to bed should introduce him to the table of some great prince.

Spectator.
She ey'd the bard, where supperless he sat,
And pin'd, unconscious of his rising fate. Pope.

TO SUPPLANT. v. a. [supplanter, Fr. sub and planta, Lat.]

1. To trip up the heels.

His legs entwining
Each other, till supplanted down he fell;
A monstrous serpent on his belly prone.

Milton, P. L.
The thronging populace with hasty strides
Obstruct the easy way; the rocking town
Supplants their footsteps; to and fro they reel.

Philips.
2. To displace by stratagem; to turn out.

It is Philoclea his heart is set upon; it is my daughter I have borne to supplant me.

Sidney.
Upon a just survey, take 'Titus' part,
And so supplant us for ingratitude. Shakespeare.

3. To displace; to overpower; to force away.

If it be fond, call it a woman's fear;
Which fear if better reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe, and say, I wrong'd the duke.

Shakespeare.
Suspecting that the courtier had supplanted the friend. Fell.

4. The sense in this passage seems to be mistaken.

For such doctrines as depend merely upon institution and the instruction of others, men do frequently differ both from themselves, and from one another about them; because that which can plant, can supplant. Wilkins.

SUPPLANTATION.* n. s. [from supplant.] The act of supplanting or displacing.

The miraculous supplantation [of Jacob] was a kind of wrestling with his brother for the blessing.

Stokes on the Prophets, (1659), p. 82.

SUPPLANTER.† n. s. [from supplant.] One that supplants; one that displaces.

A man to ben a supplantour. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

Is not he rightly named Jacob, [in the margin, that is, a supplanter.] Gen. xvii. 36.

A treacherous supplanter and underminer of the peace of all families and societies.

South, Sermon, vi. 113.

The Gentiles began to press into the Gospel, and as by force to take it from the Jews. This was signified in the name Jacob, that is, a supplanter; for the Gentiles here supplanted their elder brother the Jews, and stole the blessing and heirship from them.

Leslie, Truth of Chr. Demonstrated.

SUPPLANTING.* n. s. [from supplant.] The act of displacing or turning out.

That sad disunion and jealousy, those divisions and supplantings that were among the king's own friends. Hoadly, Sermon, 30 Jan. (1717-8), p. 20.

SUPPLE. adj. [souple, Fr.]

1. Pliant; flexible.

The joints are more supple to all feats of activity in youth than afterwards. Bacon.

Will ye submit your necks, and choose to bend

The supple knee? Milton, P. L.

And sometimes went, and sometimes ran,

With supple joints, as lively vigour led.

Milton, P. L.

No women are apter to spin linen well than the Irish, who labouring little in any kind with their hands, have their fingers more supple and soft than other women of the poorer condition in England. Temple.

2. Yielding; soft; not obstinate.

When we've stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of blood
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priestlike fists. Shakespeare.
Ev'n softer than thy own, of suppler kind,
More exquisite of taste, and more than man refin'd. Dryden.

If punishment reaches not the mind, and makes not the will supple, it hardens the offender. Locke.

3. Flattering; fawning; bending.

There is something so supple and insinuating in this absurd unnatural doctrine, as makes it extremely agreeable to a prince's ear. Addison.

4. That which makes supple.

Each part deriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff, and stark, and cold appear, like death. Shakespeare.

TO SUPPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

TO SUPPLE. v. n. To grow soft; to grow pliant.

The stones
Did first the rigour of their kind expel,
And suppled into softness as they fell. Dryden.

SUPPLELY.* adv. [from supple.] Softly; mildly; pliantly.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

SUPPLEMENT. n. s. [supplement, Fr. supplementum, Lat.]

1. Addition to any thing by which its defects are supplied.

Unto the word of God, being in respect of that end for which God ordained it, perfect, exact, and absolute in itself, we do not add reason as a supplement of any maim or defect therein, but as a necessary instrument, without which we could not reap by the Scripture's perfection that fruit and benefit which it yieldeth. Hooker.

His blood will atone for our imperfection, his righteousness he imputed in supplement to what is lacking in ours. Rogers.

Instructive satire, true to virtue's cause!
Thou shining supplement of public laws! Young.

2. Store; supply. Not in use.

We had not spent
Our ruddie wine a ship-board; supplement
Of large sort each man to his vessel drew. Chapman.

SUPPLEMENTAL. } adj. [from supplement.]
SUPPLEMENTARY. } ment. Additional;
such as may supply the place of what is lost or wanting.

Supplemental acts of state were made to supply defects of laws; and so tonnage and poundage were collected. Claarendon.

Arbutnot.

4. To sustain; to keep from fainting.

With inward consolations recompens'd,

And oft supported.

Milton, P. L.

SUPPORT.† n. s. [support, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Act or power of sustaining.

Though the idea we have of a horse or stone be but the collection of those several sensible qualities which we find united in them, yet, because we cannot conceive how they should subsist alone, we suppose them existing in and supported by some common subject, which support we denote by the name substance, though it be certain we have no clear idea of that support.

Locke.

2. Prop; sustaining power.

3. Necessaries of life.

Theirs be the produce of the soil!
O may it still reward their toil!
Nor ever the defenceless train
Of clinging infants ask support in vain! Shenstone.

4. Maintenance; supply.

Let us next consider the ward, or person within age, for whose assistance and support these guardians are constituted by law. Blackstone.

SUPPORABLE. adj. [supportable, French, from support.] Tolerable; to be endured. It may be observed that Shakespeare accents the first syllable.

As great to me, as late; and supportable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you.

Shakespeare, Tempest.
Alterations in the project of uniting Christians might be very supportable, as things in their own nature indifferent. Swift.

I wish that whatever part of misfortunes they must bear, may be rendered supportable to them. Pope.

Invincible ignorance is, in the far greatest number of men, ready to be confronted against the necessity of their believing all the severals of any supportable catalogue. Hammond.

SUPPOSAL. n. s. [from suppose.] Position without proof; imagination; belief.

Young Fortinbras,
Holding a weak supposal of our worth,
Thinks our state to be out of frame. Shakespeare.

Little can be looked for towards the advancement of natural theory, but from those that are likely to mend our prospect: the defect of events, and sensible appearances, suffer us to proceed no further towards science, than to imperfect guesses and timorous supposals. Glanville, Seeps. Pref.

When this comes, our former supposal of sufficient grace, as of the preaching of the word, and God's calls, are utterly at an end. Hammond.

Interest, with a Jew, never proceeds but upon supposal at least of a firm and sufficient bottom. South.

Artful men endeavour to entangle thoughtless women by bold supposals and offers.

Richardson, Clarissa.
To SUPPOSE. v. a. [supposer, Fr. suppono, Lat.]

1. To lay down without proof; to advance by way of argument or illustration without maintaining the truth of the position.

Where we meet with all the indications and evidences of such a thing as the thing is capable of, supposing it to be true, it must needs be very irrational to make any doubt of it. Wilkins.

2. To admit without proof.

This is to be entertained as a firm principle, that when we have as great assurance that a thing is, as we could possibly, supposing it were, we ought not to make any doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

Suppose some so negligent that they will not be brought to learn by gentle ways, yet it does not thence follow that the rough discipline of the cudgel is to be used to all. Locke.

3. To imagine; to believe without examination.

Tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers.

Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the king's sons; for Amnon only is slain. 2 Sam. xiii. 32.

I suppose
We should compel them to a quick result. Milton, P. L.

One falsehood always supposes another, and renders all you can say suspected. Female Quix.

6. To put one thing by fraud in the place of another.

SUPPOSE. n. s. [from the verb.] Supposition; position without proof; unevincenced conceit.

We come short of our suppose so far,
That after seven years' siege, yet Troy walls stand. Shakespeare.

Is Egypt's safety, and the king's, and yours,
Fit to be trusted on a bare suppose
That he is honest? Dryden, Cleomenes.

SUPPOSER. n. s. [from suppose.] One that supposes.

Thou hast by marriage made thy daughter mine,
While counterfeit supposers bleard thine eye. Shakespeare.

SUPPOSITION. n. s. [supposition, Fr. from suppose.] Position laid down; hypothesis; imagination yet unproved.

In saying he is a good man, understand me that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition. Shakespeare.

Sing, siren, for thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lye;
And in that glorious supposition think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die. Shakespeare.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

Such an original irresistible notion is neither requisite upon supposition of a Deity, nor is pretended to by religion. Bentley.

SUPPOSITIONAL.  adj.* [from supposition.] Hypothetical.

Men and angels, indeed, have also a certain knowledge of future things, but it is not absolute, but only suppositional. South, Sermon ix. 327.

SUPPOSITIOUS. adj. [from suppositus, suppositivus, Lat.]

1. Not genuine; put by a trick into the place or character belonging to another.

The destruction of Mustapha was so fatal to Solymán's line, as the succession of the Turks from Solymán is suspected to be of strange blood; for that Selymus II. was thought to be supposititious. Bacon.

It is their opinion that no man ever killed his father; but that, if it should ever happen, the reputed son must have been illegitimate, supposititious, or begotten in adultery. Addison.

There is a Latin treatise among the supposititious pieces, ascribed to Athanasius. Waterland.

2. Supposed; imaginary; not real.

Some alterations in the globe tend rather to the benefit of the earth, and its productions, than their destruction, as all these supposititious ones manifestly would do. Woodward.

Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. ch. 2. § 145.

Nor was his burial only represented typically, but foretold prophetically, both by a suppositive intimation, and by an express prediction.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

SUPPOSITIVE.  n. s.* That which implies supposition: as, if.

4 Z

The suppositives denote connection, but assert not actual existence; the positives imply both the one and the other. Harris, Hermes, B. 2. ch. 2.
SUPPOSITIVELY. adv. [from suppose.] Upon supposition.

The unreformed sinner may have some hope suppositively, if he do change and repent: the honest penitent may hope positively. Hammond.

SUPPOSITORY. n. s. [suppositoire, Fr. suppositorium, Lat.] A kind of solid clyster.

Nothing relieves the head more than the piles, therefore suppositories of honey, aloes, and rock-salt ought to be tried. Arbuthnot.

TO SUPPRESS. v. a. [supprimo, suppressus, Lat. supprimer, Fr.]

1. To crush; to overpower; to overwhelm; to subdue; to reduce from any state of activity or commotion.

Glo'ster would have armour out of the Tower, To crown himself king, and suppress the prince.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
 Every rebellion, when it is suppressed, doth make the subject weaker, and the prince stronger.

Davies on Ireland.
 Sir William Herbert, with a well-armed and ordered company, set sharply upon them; and oppressing some of the forwardest of them by death, suppressed the residue by fear. Hayward.

2. To conceal; not to tell; not to reveal. Things not reveal'd, which the invisible King, Only omniscient, hath suppress'd in night.

Milton, P. L.
 Still she suppresses the name, and this keeps him in a pleasing suspense; and, in the very close of her speech, she indirectly mentions it.

Broomer on the Odyssey.

3. To keep in; not to let out.

Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice; For had the passions of thy heart burst out, I fear we should have seen decypher'd there More rancorous spight, more furious raging broils.

 cedent to the fall of man.

SUPRALAPSARIAN.* n. s. One who maintains the supralapsarian doctrine.

The supralapsarians, with whom the object of the decree is homo conditus, man created, not yet fallen; and the sublapsarians, with whom it is man fallen, or the corrupt mass. Hammond.

The supralapsarians think, that God does only consider his own glory in all that he does; and that whatever is done, arises, as from its first cause, from the decree of God; that, in this decree, God, considering only the manifestation of his own glory, intended to make the world, to put a race of men in it, to constitute them under Adam as their fountain and head; that he decreed Adam's sin, the lapse of his posterity, and Christ's death, together with the salvation or damnation of such as should be most for his glory; that to those, who were to be saved, he decreed to give such efficacious assistances, as should certainly put them in the way of salvation; and to those whom he rejected, he decreed to give such assistances and means only, as should render them inexcusable; that all men do continue in a state of grace or of sin, and shall be saved or damned, according to that first decree.

Burnet on the 39 Articles, Art. 17.

SUPRAMUNDANE.* adj. [supra and mundane.] Above the world.

He that was in the form of God, clothed with all the majesty and glory of the supramundane life, yet emptied himself of all this unspeakable felicity, and took upon him the form of a servant.

Hallywell, Sav. of Souls, (1677.) p. 19.

Beings divine, supramundane, and unchangeable. Harris, Three Treatises, Notes.

SUPRAVULGAR. adj. [supra and vulgar.] Above the vulgar.

SUPREMACY. n. s. [from supreme.] Highest place; highest authority; state of being supreme.

No appeal may be made unto any one of higher power, inasmuch as the order of your discipline admitteth no standing inequality of courts, no spiritual judge to have any ordinary superior on earth, but as many supremacies as there are parishes and several congregations. Hooker.

As we under heav'n are supreme head, So, under him, that great supremacy, Where we do reign, we will alone uphold.

Shakespeare, K. John.

I am ashamed that women Should seek for rule, supremacy, and sway, When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.

Shakespeare.

Put to proof his high supremacy, Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate.

Milton, P. L.

Henry VIII. had no intention to change religion; he continued to burn protestants after he had cast off the pope's supremacy.

You're formed by nature for this supremacy, which is granted from the distinguishing character of your writing. Dryden.

From some wild curs that from their masters ran, Abhorring the supremacy of man,

In woods and caves the rebel race began. Dryden.

Supremacy of nature, or supremacy of perfection, is to be possessed of all perfection, and the highest excellency possible. Waterland.

To deny him this supremacy is to dethrone the Deity, and give his kingdom to another. Rogers.

SUPREME. adj. [supremus, Lat.]

1. Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed, that superiour is used often of local elevation, but supreme only of intellectual or political.

As no man serveth God, and loveth him not; so neither can any man sincerely love God, and not extremely abhor that sin which is the highest degree of treason against the supreme Guide and Monarch of the whole world, with whose divine authority and power it investeth others. Hooker.

The god of soldiers, With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness. Shakespeare, Coriol.

My soul aches To know, when two authorities are up, Neither supreme, how soon confusion May enter 'twixt the gap of both. Shakspeare, Coriol.

going barefoot to preach the gospel?

Dr. Fulke, Answ. to P. Frarine, (1586), p. 17.
Their march they continued all that night, the horsemen often alighting, that the foot might ride, and others taking many of them behind them;
however they could not but be extremely weary and surbated. Clarendon.

Chalky land surbates and spoils oxen's feet.

Mortimer.

SURBEAT, v. t. } The participle passive of SURBE T. } surbeat, which Spenser and Hall have used for surbate.

A bear and tyger being met
In cruel fight on Lybick ocean wide,
Espy a traveller with feet surbet,
Whom they in equal prey hope to divide.

Spenser, F. Q.

Along thy way thou canst not but decry
Fair glittering halls to tempt the hopeful eye;
Thy right eye 'gins to leap for vaine delight,
And surbeat toes to tickle at the sight.

Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 2.

TO SURCEASE, v. n. [sur and cesser,
Fr. cesso, Lat.]

1. To be at an end; to stop; to cease; to be no longer in use or being.

Small favours will my prayers increase;
Granting my suit, you give me all;
And then my prayers must needs surcease;
For I have made your godhead fall. Donne.

2. To leave off; to practise no longer; to refrain finally.

To fly altogether from God, to despair, that creatures unworthy shall be able to obtain any thing at his hands, and under that pretence to surcease from prayers, as bootless or fruitless offices, were to him no less injurious than pernicious to our own souls. Hooker.

Nor did the British squadrons now surcease
To gall their foes o'erwhelm'd. Philips.
So pray'd he, whilst an angel's voice from high
Bade him surcease to importune the sky. Harle.

TO SURCEASE, v. t. [sur and cesser, Fr.] To stop; to put to an end.

All pain hath end, and every war hath peace;
But mine no price, nor prayer, may surcease.

Spenser.

God, according to the wise and unsearchable economy of his dealing with sinners, after such an height of provocation, withdraws his grace, and surceases the operations of his spirit.

South, Serm. x. 323.

Abrogating or surceasing the judiciary power.

Temple, Introduct. Hist. Eng. p. 174.

SURCEASE, n. s. Cessation; stop.

It might very well agree with your principles, if your discipline were fully planted, even to send out your writs of surcease into all courts of England for the most things handled in them. Hooker.

TO SURCHARGE, v. a. [surcharger, Fr.]
To overload; to overburthen.

They put upon every portion of land a reasonable rent, which they called Romescot, the which might not surcharge the tenant or freeholder.

Spenser on Ireland.

Tamas was returned to Tauris, in hope to have suddenly surprised his enemy, surcharged with the pleasures of so rich a city.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

More remov'd,

Lest heaven surcharg'd with potent multitude,
Might hap to move new broils. Milton, P. L.

He ceas'd, discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears
Without the vent of words. Milton, P. L.

When graceful sorrow in her pomp appears,
Sure she is dress'd in the Melesinda's tears:
Your head reclin'd, as hiding grief from view,
Droops like a rose surcharg'd with morning dew.

Dryden.

SURCHARGE, n. s. [surcharge, Fr. from the verb.] Burthen added to burthen; overburthen; more than can be well borne.

The air, after receiving a charge, doth not receive a surcharge, or greater charge, with like appetite as it doth the first. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

An object of surcharge or excess destroyeth
the sense; as the light of the sun, the eye; a violent sound near the ear, the hearing.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The moralists make this raging of a lion to be a surcharge of one madness upon another.

L'Estrange.

SURCHARGER, n. s. [from surcharge.] One that overburthens.

SURCINGLE, n. s. [sur and cingulum,
Lat.]

1. A girth with which the burthen is bound upon a horse.

2. The girdle of a cassock.
Justly he chose the surcingle and gown.

Marvel.

SURCINGLED, * adj. [from the noun.]
Girt.

Is't not a shame to see each homely groome
Sit perched in an idle chariot room,
That were not meete some pannel to bestride,
*Surcingle*d to a galled hackney's hide?

Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 6.

SURCLE, n. s. [surculus, Lat.] A shoot;
a twig; a sucker. Not in general use.

It is an arborescent excrecence, or superplant, which the tree cannot assimilate, and therefore sprouteth not forth in boughs and surcles of the same shape unto the tree. Brown.

The basilica dividing into two branches below the cubit, the outward sendeth two surcles unto the thumb. Brown.

SURCOAT, n. s. [surcoat, old French; sur and coat.] A short coat worn over the rest of the dress.

The honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament-robes, the surcoat, and mantle.

Camden.

The commons were besotted in excess of apparel, in wide surcoats reaching to their loins.

Camden.

That day in equal arms they fought for fame;
Their swords, their shields, their surcoats were the same. Dryden.

SURCREW, * n. s. [sur and crew.] Augmentation; additional collection. Not in use.

It [a fever] had once left me, as I thought; but it was only to fetch more company, returning with a surcrew of those splenetic vapours that are called hypochondriacal. Wolton, Rem. p. 361.

TO SURCULATE, * v. a. [surculo, Lat.]
To prune; to cut off young shoots.

Cockeram.

SURCULATION, * n. s. [from surculate.]
The act of pruning.

When insition and grafting, in the text, is applied unto the olive-tree, it hath an emphatical sense, very agreeable unto that tree, which is best propagated this way; not at all by surculation.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 47.

SURD, adj. [surdus, Lat. sourd, Fr.]
1. Deaf; wanting the sense of hearing.

He who hath had the patience of Diogenes, to make orations unto statues, may more sensibly apprehend how all words fall to the ground, spent upon such a surd and earless generation of men, stupid unto all instruction, and rather requiring an exorcist than an orator for their conversion.

Brown, Chr. Morals, li. 6.

2. Unheard; not perceived by the ear.
3. Not expressed by any term.

SURDNUMBER, n. s. [from surd and number.] That is incommensurate with unity.

SURDITY, n. s. [from surd.] Deafness.
Cockeram.

SURE, adj. [seure, Fr.]

1. Certain; unfailing; infallible.
The testimony of the Lord is sure, and giveth wisdom unto the simple. Ps. xix. 7.

Who knows,
Let this be good, whether our angry foe
Can give it, or will ever? How can he Is doubtful, that he never will, is sure.

Milton, P. L.

2. Certainly doomed.
Our coin beyond sea is valued according to the silver in it: sending it in bullion is the safest way, and the weightiest is sure to go. Locke.

3. Confident; undoubting; certainly knowing.
Friar Laurence met them both;
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;
But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it. Shaks.

Let no man seek what may befall;
Evil he may be sure. Milton, P. L.

The youngest in the morning are not sure
That till the night their life they can secure.

Denham.

While sore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why would we tempt the doubtful dye agen?
In wars renew'd, uncertain of success,
Sure of a share, as umpires of the peace. Dryden.

If you find nothing new in the matter, I am sure much less will you in the stile. Wake.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence.

Pope.

4. Safe; firm; certain; past doubt or danger. To make sure is to secure, so as that nothing shall put it out of one's possession or power.

Thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens do rule. Dan. iv. 26.

He had me make sure of the bear, before I sell his skin. L'Estrange.

They would make others on both sides sure of pleasing, in preference to instruction.

Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

They have a nearer and surer way to the felicity of life, by tempering their passions, and reducing their appetites. Temple.

A peace cannot fail, provided we make sure of Spain. Temple.

Revenge is now my joy; he's not for me,
And I'll make sure he ne'er shall be for thee.

Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
All to make sure the vengeance of this day,
Which even this day has ruin'd.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

Make Cato sure, and give up Utica.
Cæsar will ne'er refuse thee such a trifle.

Addison.

They have reason to make all actions worthy of observation, which are sure to be observed.

Atturbury.

5. Firm; stable; steady; not liable to failure.

Thou the garland wear'st successively;
Yet though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,

Thou art not firm enough. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
I wish your horses swift and sure of foot,
And so I do commend you to their backs.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I wrapt in sure bands both their hands and feet,
And cast them under hatches.

Chapman.

Virtue, dear friend, needs no defence;
The surest guard is innocence. Roscommon.
Partition firm and sure the waters to divide.

Milton, P. L.

Doubting thus of innate principles, men will call pulling up the old foundations of knowledge and certainty: I persuade myself that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays those foundations sure. Locke.

To prove a genuine birth,
On female truth assenting faith relies:
Thus manifest of right, I build my claim,
Sure founded on a fair maternal fame. Pope, Odyss.

6. To be SURE. Certainly. This is a vicious expression: more properly be sure.

Objects of sense would then determine the views of all such, to be sure, who conversed perpetually with them.

Atturbury.

Though the chymist could not calcine the caput mortuum, to obtain its fixed salt, to be sure it must have some.

Arbutnot.

SURE. adv. [surement, French.] Certainly; without doubt; doubtless. It is generally without emphasis; and, notwithstanding its original meaning, expresses rather doubt than assertion.

Something, sure, of state
Hath puddled his clear spirit. Shakspeare.

Her looks were flush'd, and sullen was her mien,
That sure the virgin goddess, had she been Aught but a virgin, must the guilt have seen.

Addison.

Sure the queen would wish him still unknown:
She loaths, detests him, flies his hated presence.

Smith.

Better, upon the whole, a bad author deserves
Better usage than a bad critic. Pope.

SUREFOOTED. adj. [sure and foot.] Treading firmly; not stumbling.

True earnest sorrows, rooted miseries,
Anguish in grain, vexations ripe and blown,
Surefooted griefs, solid calamities. Herbert.

SURELY. adv. [from sure.]

1. Certainly; undoubtedly; without doubt. It is often used rather to intend and strengthen the meaning of the sentence, than with any distinct and explicable meaning.

In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die. Genesis.

Thou surely hadst not come sole fugitive. Milton, P. L.

He that created something out of nothing, surely can raise great things out of the small. South.

The curious have thought the most minute affairs of Rome worth notice; and surely the consideration of their wealth is at least of as great importance as grammatical criticisms. Arbutnot.

Surely we may presume, without affecting to sit in the seat of God, to think some very fallible men liable to errors. Waterland.

2. Firmly; without hazard.

He that walketh uprightly walketh surely. Proverbs.

SURENESS. n. s. [from sure.] Certainty.

The subtle ague, that for sureness sake
Takes its own time th' assault to make. Cowley.
He diverted himself with the speculation of the seed of coral; and for more sureness he repeats it. Woodward.

SURETISHIP. n. s. [from surety.] The office of a surety or bondsman; the act of being bound for another.

Idly, like prisoners, which whole months will swear

That only suretiship hath brought them there. Donne.

If here not clear'd, no suretiship can bail
Condemned debtors from th' eternal gaol. Denham.

Hath not the greatest slaughter of armies been effected by stratagem? And have not the fairest estates been destroyed by suretiship? South.

SURETY. n. s. [sureté, Fr.]

1. Certainty; indubitableness.

Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger. Gen. xv.

2. Security; safety.

There the princesses determining to bathe, thought it was so privileged a place as no body durst presume to come thither; yet, for the more surety, they looked round about. Sidney.

3. Foundation of stability; support.

We our state

Hold, as you yours, while our obedience holds:
On other surety none. Milton, P. L.

4. Evidence; ratification; confirmation.

She call'd the saints to surety,
That she would never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself. Shakspeare.

5. Security against loss or damage; security for payment.

There remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more, in surety of the which
One host of Aquitain is bound to us. Shakspeare.

6. Hostage; bondsman; one that gives security for another; one that is bound for another.

That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you,

One of the greatest in the Christian world
Shall be my surety. Shakspeare, All's Well.

I will be surety for him; of my hand shall thou require him. Gen. xliii. 9.

Yet be not surety, if thou be a father;
Love is a personal debt: I cannot give My children's right, nor ought he take it. Herbert.

All, in infancy, are by others presented with the desires of the parents, and intercession of sureties, that they may be early admitted by baptism into the school of Christ. Hammond.

SURE.* n. s. [probably from the French surfrot, "the rising of billow upon billow, or the interchanged swelling of several waves." Cotgrave.] The swell or dashing of the sea that beats against rocks or the shore.

Swell is more particularly applied to the fluctuating motion of the sea, which remains after the expiration of a storm; and also to that which breaks on the shore, or on rocks and shallows, called surf. Falconer.

SURFACE. † n. s. [surface, old Fr. sur and face. Milton, as Dr. Johnson has observed, places the accent on the last syllable; and the poet's word is the earliest of his examples. I find it in use about half a century earlier, where it is written sur-face. Shakspeare has not this word.] Superficies; outside; super-

With several medicines the body of the earth is so every where replenished, yea and the sur-face of it so every where overstrewn.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622), p. 254.

Which of us who beholds the bright surface
Of this ethereal mold, whereon we stand.

Milton, P. L.

Errours like straws upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below.

Dryden.

All their surfaces shall be truly plain, or truly spherical, and look all the same way, so as together to compose one even surface. Newton, Opt.

TO SURFEIT. † v. a. [from sur and faire, French, to do more than enough, to overdo. Dr. Johnson. — But surfait is an old French word in the sense of excès. See Roquefort's Supplém.] To feed with meat or drink to satiety and sickness; to cram over-much.

The surfeited grooms

Do mock their charge with snores. Shakspeare.

TO SURFEIT. v. n. To be fed to satiety and sickness.

They are as sick that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Take heed lest your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness. St. Luke, xxi. 34.

Though some had so surfeited in the vineyards, and with the wines, that they had been left behind, the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home. Clarendon.

They must be let loose to the childish play they fancy, which they should be weaned from, by being made to surfeit of it. Locke.

SURFEIT. n. s. [from the verb.] Sickness or satiety caused by overfulness.

When we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!
I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so profane.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Why, disease, dost thou molest
Ladies, and of them the best?
Do not men grow sick of rites,
To thy althars, by their nights
Spent in surfeits?

B. Jonson.

Surfeits many times turn to purges, both upwards and downwards. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Peace, which he loved in life, did lend
Her hand, to bring him to his end;
When age and death call'd for the score,
No surfeits were to reckon for.

Crashaw.

Our father
Has ta'en himself a surfeit of the world,
And cries, it is not safe that we should taste it.

Outway.

SURFEITER. n. s. [from surfeit.] One who riots; a glutton.

I did not think

This am'rous surfeiter would have don'd his helm

For such a petty war. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

SURFEITING.* n. s. [from surfeit.] The act of feeding with meat or drink to satiety and sickness.

Kill not her quickening power with surfeittings;
Mar not her sense with sensuality. Davies.

SURFEITWATER. n. s. [surfeit and water.] Water that cures surfeits.

A little cold distilled poppywater, which is the true surfeit-water, with ease and abstinence, often ends distempers in the beginning. Locke.

SURGE. n. s. [from surgo, Lat.] A swelling sea; wave rolling above the general surface of the water; billow; wave.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any. Spenser.

The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous main

Seems to cast water on the burning bear,
And quench the guards of the ever-fired pole:

I never did like molestation view

On the enchafed flood. Shakespeare.

He trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted
The surge most swollen that met him.

Shakespeare, Tempest.
It was formerly famous for the unfortunate loves of Hero and Leander, drowned in the uncompensated surges. Sandys.

The sulph'rous hail
Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid

The fiery surge, that from the precipice
Of heaven receiv'd us falling. Milton, P. L.

He sweeps the skies, and clears the cloudy north:

He flies aloft, and with impetuous roar
Pursues the foaming surges to the shore. Dryden.

Thetis, near Ismena's swelling flood,
With dread beheld the rolling surges sweep

In heaps his slaughter'd sons into the deep. Pope.

TO SURGE. v. n. [from surgo, Lat.] To swell; to rise high.

From midst of all the main
The surging waters like a mountain rise. Spenser.

He, all in rage, his sea-god sire besought,
Some cursed vengeance on his sons to cast;

From surging gulfs two monsters straight were brought. Spenser.

The serpent mov'd, not with indented wave,
Proned on the ground, as since; but on his rear,

Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton, P. L.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, the assault renew,

Vain battery, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton, P. R.

SURGELESS.* adj. [surge and less.] Without surges; calm.

In surgeless seas of quiet rest when I
Seven years had sail'd, a pirrie did arise,

The blasts whereof abridg'd my libertie. Mir. for Mag. p. 194.

SURGEON.† n. s. [Corrupted by conversation from surgeon. Dr. Johnson.—

Surgeon is a very old English word; and is no doubt adopted from the ancient French, surgien.] One who cures by manual operation; one whose duty is to act in external maladies by the direction of the physician.

The wound was past the cure of a better surgeon than myself, so as I could but receive some few of her dying words. Sidney.

I meddle with no woman's matters; but withal, I am a surgeon to old shoes. Shaks. Jul. Cas.

He that hath wounded his neighbour is tied to the expences of the surgeon, and other incidences. Bp. Taylor.

Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain:

The surgeons soon despoil'd of their of arms,
And some with salves they cure. Dryden.

SURGERY.† n. s. [for chirurgery.] The *Surger*y. } act of curing by manual operation.

It would seem very evil surgery to cut off every unsound part of the body, which, being by other due means recovered, might afterwards do good service. Spenser.

Strangely visited people,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

They are often tar'd over with the surgery of our sheep, and would you have us kiss tar?

SURGICAL.* adj. Pertaining to the art and skill of a surgeon; chirurgical.

SURGRY. adj. [from surge.] Rising in billows.

Do publick or domestick cares constrain
This toilsome voyage o'er the surgy main? Pope.

SURLINLY.† adv. [from surly.] In a surly manner. Sherwood.

They were both hastily passionate; he was sometimes surlily ill-natured, while she was apt to conceive what he never intended.

The Student, vol. ii. p. 102.

SURLINESS.† n. s. [from surly.] Gloomy moroseness; sour anger.

Lycurgus—sent the poet Thales from Crete to prepare and mollify the Spartan surliness with his smooth songs and odes. Milton, Areopagitica.

Thus pale they meet; their eyes with fury burn;
None greets; for none the greeting will return;

But in dumb surliness, each arm'd with care
His foe profess, as brother of the war. Dryden.

SURLING. n. s. [from surly.] A sour morose felling. Not used.

As for these sour surlings, they are to be commended to sieur Gaulard. Camden, Rem.

SURLY.† adj. [from rup, soun, Saxon. Dr. Johnson.—Or rather, perhaps, from the old Fr. sural, the same.] Gloomily morose; rough; uncivil; sour; silently angry.

'Tis like you 'll prove a jolly surlly groom,
That take it on you at the first so roundly. Shakespeare.

That surlly spirit, melancholy,
Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy thick,

Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot laughter keep men's eyes,

And strain their cheeks to idle merriment. Shakespeare, K. John.

Against the Capitol I met a lion,
Who glar'd upon me, and went surlly by,
Without annoying me. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

If a man be harsh or surlly in his discourse, rugged or rude in his demeanour, hard and rigorous in his dealing, it is a certain argument of his defect in charity. Barrow, Sermon. i. 335.

Repuls'd by surlly glooms, who wait before
The sleeping tyrant's interdicted door. Dryden.

What if among the courtly tribe
You lost a place, and sav'd a bribe?

And then in surlly mood came here
To fifteen hundred pounds a year,

And fierce against the Whigs harangu'd? Swift.

The zephyrs floating loose, the timely rains,
Now soften'd into joy the surlly storms. Thomson.

SURMISAL.* n. s. [from surmise.] Imperfect notion; surmise.

From this needless surmisal I shall hope to disuade the intelligent and equal auditor.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

TO SURMISE. v. a. [surmise, Fr.] To suspect; to imagine imperfectly; to imagine without certain knowledge.

Man coveteth what exceedeth the reach of sense, yea somewhat above capacity of reason, somewhat divine and heavenly, which with hidden exhibition it rather surmiseth than conceiveth; somewhat it seeketh, and what that is directly it knoweth not; yet very intensive desire thereof doth so incite it, that all other known delights and pleasures are laid aside, and they give place to the search of this but only suspected desire. Hooker.

Of questions and strifes of words commit envy, railings, and evil surmisings. 1 Tim. vi. 4.

Surmise not
His presence to these narrow bounds confin'd. Milton, P. L.

It waited nearer yet, and then she knew
That what before she but surmis'd, was true. Dryden.

This change was not wrought by altering the form or position of the earth, as was surmised by a very learned man, but by dissolving it. Woodward.

SURMISE. n. s. [surmise, French.] Imperfect notion; suspicion; imagination not supported by knowledge.

To let go private surmises, whereby the thing itself is not made better or worse; if just and allowable reasons might lead them to do as they did, then are these censures frustrate. Hooker.

They were by law of that proud tyranness, Provok'd with wrath, and envy's false surmise,
Condemned to that dungeon merciless,
Where they should live in woe, and die in wretchedness. Spenser.

My compassionate heart
Will not permit my eyes once to behold
The thing, wherewith it trembles by surmise. Shakespeare.

My thought, whose murdering yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

No sooner did they espy the English turning from them, but they were of opinion that they fled towards their shipping; this surmise was occasioned, for that the English ships removed the day before. Hayward.

We double honour gain
From his surmise prov'd false. Milton, P. L.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises,
False oaths, false tears, deceits, disguises. Pope.

No man ought to be charged with principles he actually disowns, unless his practices contradict his profession; not upon small surmises. Swift.

SURMISER.* n. s. [from surmise.] One who surmises.

I should first desire these surmisers to point out the time when, and the persons who began this design. Lively Oracles, &c. (1678.) p. 37.

TO SURMOUNT. v. a. [surmonter, Fr.]

1. To rise above.

The mountains of Olympus, Atho, and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds. Raleigh.

2. To conquer; to overcome.

Though no resistance was made, the English had much ado to surmount the natural difficulties of the place the greatest part of one day. Hayward.

He hardly escaped to the Persian court; from whence, if the love of his country had not surmounted its base ingratitude to him, he had many invitations to return at the head of the Persian fleet; but he rather chose a voluntary death. Swift.

3. To surpass; to exceed.

What surmounts the reach
Of human sense, I shall delineate so,
By lik'ning spiritual to corporeal forms,
As may express them best. Milton, P. L.

SURMOUNTABLE.† adj. [surmountable, old Fr.] Conquerable; superable.

The author has, by several arguments hardly surmountable, gone a great way to destroy the received opinion. Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bib. B. 3. ch. 4.

SURMOUNT. n. s. [from surmount.] One that rises above another.

SURMOUNTING. n. s. The act of getting uppermost.

SURMULLET. n. s. [mugil, Lat.] A sort of fish. Ainsworth.

SURNAME.† n. s. [surnom, French.]

"It is a great dispute whether we should write surname or sirname: on the one hand, there are a thousand instances in court-rolls, and other ancient muniments, where the description of the person, le Smyth, le Tayleur, &c. is written over the Christian name of the person, this only being inserted in the line; and the French always write surnom. And certainly surname must be the truth, in regard of the patriarch or first person that bore the name. However, there is no impropriety, at this time of day, to say sirname, since these additions are so apparently taken from our sires or fathers. Thus the matter seems to be left to people's option." Pegge, Anonym. iii. 32.]

1. The name of the family; the name which one has over and above the Christian name.

Many which are mere English joined with the Irish against the king, taking on them Irish habits and customs, which could never since be clean wiped away; of which sort be most of the surnames that end in an, as Hernan, Shinan, and Mungan, which now account themselves natural Irish. Spenser.

He, made heir not only of his brother's kingdom, but of his virtues and haughty thoughts, and of the surname also of Barbarossa, began to aspire to the empire. Knolles, Hist.

SURVIVANCE. } survivance. Hume has somewhere used survivance. Survivance is the old word; survival, modern.]

Survivorship.

Sir Thomas More and our best chroniclers make it doubtful whether these two prices were so lost in king Richard's time, or no; and infer that one of them was thought to be living many years after his death: that might be enough to acquit him:
which opinion I like the better, because it men-tioneth the survivance but of one of them.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646,) p. 87.

His son had the survivance of the stadtholder-
ship.

of a lawful age for the susception of orders, shall have a voice in the chapter. Ayliffe, Parergon.

SUSCEPTIVE.† adj. [from suscepsum, Latin.]
This word is more analogical, though less used than susceptible. Dr. Johnson.
—The word is old; and I should suppose in common use. Dr. Johnson produces no other authority than the comparatively modern one of Watts.]
Capable to admit.

The limiter of this susceptible power unto the matter, in such differing degrees, and measures, and manners, can be none other but only that Omnipotent Creator of the matter.

Fotherley, Atheism (1622), p. 181.
Our plea was, that we had neither a decisive voice to determine with them; nor a deliberative voice to consult with them; nor an elective voice in choice of their persons, to make them our trustees to determine for us; nor lastly, as at least we should have, a susceptible voice, in a body of our own to receive their resolutions, and of ourselves to submit unto them.

Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 91.
Since our nature is so susceptible of errors on all sides, it is fit we should have notices given us how far other persons may become the causes of false judgments. Watts, Logic.

SUSCEPTIVITY.* n. s. [from susceptible.]
Capability of admitting.

Nor can we have any idea of matter, which does not imply a natural discernibility, and susceptibility of various shapes and modifications.

Wollaston, § v. 11.
SUSCEPTOR.* n. s. [susceptor, Lat.] One who undertakes; a godfather. Coles.

In our church, those who are not secular persons are not forbid to be godfathers, (as in the church of Rome,) nor are any susceptors supposed to contract any affinity, as that such an undertaking should hinder marriage between the sponsors and the persons baptized, if otherwise it be lawful.

suscito, Latin.] To rouse; to excite.

He shall suscite or rouse the courage of all men inclined to virtue.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 209.
It concurrith but unto predisposed effects, and only suscitates those forms whose determinations are seminal, and proceed from the idea of themselves. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SUSCITATION.† n. s. [suscitation, French, from suscitare.] The act of rousing or exciting. Bullockar.

The temple is supposed to be here dissolved;
and, being so, to be raised again: therefore the suscitation must answer to the dissolution.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

To SUSPECT. v. a. [suspicio, suspectum,
Latin.]

1. To imagine with a degree of fear and jealousy what is not known.

Nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little; and therefore men should remedy suspicion by procuring to know more. Bacon.

He doubts the worst, and that a while did stay him. Fairfax.

To themselves I left them;
For I suspend their doom. Milton, P. L.

The reasons for suspending the play were ill founded. Dryden.

This is the hinge on which turns the liberty of intellectual beings, in their steady prosecution of true felicity, that they can suspend this prosecution in particular cases, till they have looked before them. Locke.

5. To keep undetermined.

A man may suspend his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined whether it be really of a nature to make him happy or no. Locke.

6. To debar for a time from the execution of an office or enjoyment of a revenue.

Good men should not be suspended from the exercise of their ministry, and deprived of their livelihood for ceremonies, which are on all hands acknowledged indifferent. Sanderson.

The bishop of London was summoned for not suspending Dr. Sharp. Swift.

SUSPENDER.* n. s. [from suspend.] One who suspends or delays.

I may add the cautiousness of suspenders and not forward concluders.

Mountagu, App. to Cas. (1625), p. 146.

VOL. III.

SUSPENSE. n. s. [suspens, Fr. suspensus, Latin.]

1. Uncertainty; delay of certainty or determination; indetermination.

Till this be done, their good affection towards the safety of the church is acceptable; but the way they prescribe us to preserve it by, must rest in suspense. Hooker.

Such true joy's suspense

What dream can I present to recompense? Waller.

Ten days the prophet in suspense remain'd,

Would no man's fate pronounce; at last constrain'd

By Ithacus, he solemnly design'd

Me for the sacrifice. Denham.

2. Act of withholding the judgement.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are sufficient grounds to suspect that there is fallacy, or proofs as considerable to be produced on the contrary side, there suspense or dissent are often voluntary. Locke.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, deliberation, and scrutiny, whether its satisfaction misleads from our true happiness. Locke.

3. Stop in the midst of two opposites.

For thee the fates, severely kind, ordain

A cool suspense from pleasure or from pain. Pope.

SUSPENSE. adj. [suspensus, Lat.]

1. Held from proceeding.

The great light of day yet wants to run

Much of his race, though steep, suspense in heaven

2. Held in doubt; held in expectation.

The self-same orders allowed, but yet established in more wary and suspense manner, as being to stand in force till God should give the opportunity of some general conference what might be best for every of them afterwards to do; had both prevented all occasions of just dislike which others might take, and reserved a greater liberty unto the authors themselves, of entering into further consultation afterwards. Hooker.

This said, he sat; and expectation held

His looks suspense, awaiting who appear'd

To second or oppose. Milton, P. L.

SUSPENSION.* n. s. [suspension, Fr. from suspend.]

1. Act of making to hang on any thing.

True and formal crucifixion is often named by the general word suspension.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

2. Act of making to depend on any thing.

3. Act of delaying.

Had we had time to pray,
With thousand vows and tears we should have sought,
That sad decree's suspension to have wrought. Waller.

4. Act of withholding or balancing the judgement.

In his Indian relations, wherein are contained incredible accounts, he is surely to be read with suspension; these are they which weakened his authorities with former ages, for he is seldom mentioned without derogatory parentheses. Brown.

The mode of the will, which answers to dubitation, may be called suspension; and that which in the fantastick will is obstinacy, is constancy in the intellectual. Grew.

5. Interruption; temporary cessation.

Nor was any thing done for the better adjusting things in the time of that suspension, but every thing left in the same state of unconcernedness as before. Clarendon.

6. Temporary privation of an office: as, the clerk incurred suspension.

SUSPENSIVE.* adj. [from suspense.]

Doubtful. An old and elegant word.

Psyche, snatch'd from danger's desperate jaws

Into the arms of this illustrious lover,

The truth of her condition hardly knows,
But in suspensive thoughts awhile doth hover.

Beaumont, Psyche, (1651), p. 18.

These few of the lords were suspensive in their judgement. Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 139.

SUSPENSORY.* adj. [suspensoire, French; suspensivus, Lat.]

1. Suspending; belonging to that by which a thing hangs.

The crowns and garlands of the ancients were — pensile or suspensory, such as they hung about the posts of their houses in honour of their gods. Brown, Miscell. p. 90.

There are several parts peculiar to brutes which are wanting in man, as the seventh or suspensory muscle of the eye. Ray.

2. Doubtful.

This moves sober pens unto suspensory and timorous assertions. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 4.

SUSPICABLE.* adj. [from suspicio, Lat.]

That may be suspected; liable to suspicion.

I look upon these two last cures as done out of susplicable principles and upon extravagant objects. More, Myst. of Godd. (1660), p. 121.

SUSPICION. n. s. [suspicion, Fr. suspicio, Lat.] The act of suspecting; imagination of something ill without proof.

This suspicion Miso for the hogghish shrewdness of her brain, and Mopsa for a very unlikely envy, stumbled upon. Sidney.

Suspicious amongst thoughts are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight; they are to be repressed, or at the least well guarded, for they cloud the mind. Bacon.

Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes; For treason is but trusted like a fox,

Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up;

Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shaks.

Though wisdom wake, suspicion sleeps

At wisdom's gate; and to simplicity

Resigns her charge, while goodness thinks no ill

Where no ill seems. Milton, P. L.

SUSPICIOUS. adj. [suspiciosus, Lat.]

1. Inclined to suspect; inclined to imagine ill without proof.

Nature itself, after it has done an injury, will for ever be suspicious, and no man can love the person he suspects. South.

2. Indicating suspicion or fear.

A wise man will find us to be rogues by our faces; we have a suspicious, fearful, constrained countenance, often turning and sinking through narrow lanes. Swift.

3. Liable to suspicion; giving reason to imagine ill.

They, because the light of his candle too much drowned theirs, were glad to lay hold on so colourable matter, and exceeding forward to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovations. Hooker.

I spy a black suspicious threatening cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun. Shakspeare.

Authors are suspicious, nor greedily to be swallowed, who pretend to deliver antipathies, sympathies, and the occult abstrusities of things. Brown, Vulg. Err.

His life

Private, unactive, calm, contemplative,
Little suspicious to any king. Milton, P. R.

Many mischievous insects are daily at work, to make people of merit suspicious of each other. Pope.

SUSPICIOUSLY. adv. [from suspicious.]

1. With suspicion.

2. So as to raise suspicion.

His guard entering the place, found Plangus with his sword in his hand, but not naked, but standing suspiciously enough, to one already suspicious. Sidney.

SUSPICIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from suspicious.]

Tendency to suspicion.

To make my estate known seemed impossible, by reason of the suspiciousness of Miso, and my young mistress. Sidney.

Suspiciousness is as great an enemy to wisdom, as too much credulity; it doing oftentimes as hurtful wrongs to friends, as the other doth receive wrongful hurt from dissemblers.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 251.

SUSPIRAL.* n. s. [from suspire.] A spring of water passing under ground towards a conduit or cistern; also, a breathing-hole or ventiduct. Chambers.

SUSPIRATION. n. s. [suspiratio, from suspiro, Lat.] Sigh; act of fetching the breath deep.

Not customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of freed breath,
That can denote me truly. Shakespeare.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulphs of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love or sorrow. More.

To SUSPIRE.† v. n. [suspiro, Lat.]

1. To sigh; to fetch the breath deep.

2. To breathe.

Since the birth of Cain, the first male child,
To him that did but yesterday suspire,
There was not such a gracious creature born.

Shakespeare, K. John.

By his gates of breath

There lies a downy feather which stirs not:
Did he suspire, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

SUSPIRED.* part. adj. Wished for; desired earnestly; a Latinism.

O glorious morning, wherein was born the expectation of nations; and wherein the long suspired Redeemer of the world did, as his prophets had cried, rent the heavens, and come down in the vesture of humanity! Wotton, Rem. p. 269.

To SUSTAIN. v. a. [soustenir, Fr. sustineo, Lat.]

1. To bear; to prop; to hold up.

The largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More.

Vain is the force of man,

To crush the pillars that the pile sustain.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To support; to keep from sinking under evil.

The admirable curiosity and singular excellency of this design will sustain the patience, and animate the industry of him who shall undertake it.

Holder.

If he have no comfortable expectations of another life to sustain him under the evils in this world, he is of all creatures the most miserable. Tillotson.

3. To maintain; to keep.

What food

Will he convey up thither to sustain Himself and army? Milton, P. L.

But it on her, not she on it depends;

For she the body doth sustain and cherish. Davies.

My labour will sustain me. Milton, P. L.

4. To help; to relieve; to assist.

They charged, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to entreat for him, or any way sustain him.

Shakespeare.

His sons who seek the tyrant to sustain,
And long for arbitrary lords again,
He dooms to death, asserting publick right.

Dryden, Æn.

5. To bear; to endure.

Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life?

Dryden.

Shall Turnus then such endless toil sustain
In fighting fields, and conquer towns in vain?

Dryden.

The mind stands collected within herself, and sustains the shock with all the force which is natural to her; but a heart in love has its foundations sapped. Addison.

6. To bear without yielding.

Sacharissa's beauty's wine,
Which to madness doth incline;
Such a liquor as no brain
That is mortal can sustain.

Waller.

7. To suffer; to bear as inflicted.

If you omit

The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already. Shaks. Hen. VIII.
Were it I thought death menac'd would ensue
This my attempt, I would sustain alone
The worst, and not persuade thee. Milton, P. L.

SUSTAIN.* n. s. [from the verb.] What sustains or supports. Not used.
I lay and slept, I wak'd again,
For my sustain
Was the Lord. Milton, Psalms.

SUSTAINABLE. adj. [soustenable, Fr. from sustain.] That may be sustained.

SUSTAINER.† n. s. [from sustain.]

1. One that props; one that supports.

The first founder, sustainer, and continuer thereof, [the church.]

More on the Soc. Churches, p. 170.

2. One that suffers; a sufferer.

Thyself hast a sustainer been
Of much affliction in my cause. Chapman, Riad.

SUSTENANCE. n. s. [sousenance, Fr.]

1. Support; maintenance.

Scarcely allowing himself fit sustenance of life, rather than he would spend those goods for whose sake only he seemed to joy in life. Sidney.

There are unto one end sundry means; as for the sustenance of our bodies many kinds of food, many sorts of raiment to clothe our nakedness.

Hooker.

Is then the honour of your daughter of greater moment to her, than to my daughter hers whose sustenance it was? Addison.

2. Necessaries of life; victuals.

The experiment cost him his life for want of sustenance. L'Estrange.
The ancients were inventors of all arts necessary to life and sustenance, as plowing and sowing.

Temple.

SUSTENTACLE.* n. s. [sustentaculum, Lat.]

Support. Not in use.

God's the sustentacle of all natures.
More, Immort. of the Soul, i. iii. 25.

SUSTENTATION. n. s. [sustentation, Fr. from sustento, Latin.]

1. Support; preservation from falling.

These steams once raised above the earth, have their ascent and sustentation aloft promoted by the air. Boyle.

2. Use of victuals.

A very abstemious animal by reason of its frugidity, and latitancy in the winter, will long subsist without a visible sustentation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Maintenance; support of life.

When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation; it is of necessity that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

SUSURRATION. n. s. [from susurro, Lat.]

Whisper; soft murmur.

SUTE. n. s. [for suite.] Sort. I believe only misprinted.

Touching matters belonging to the church of Christ, this we conceive that they are not of one sute. Hooker.

SUTILE.* adj. [sutilis, Lat.] Done by stitching.

The fame of her needle work, "the suttle pictures" mentioned by Johnson.

Boswell, Life of Johnson.

SUTLER. n. s. [soteler, Dutch; sudler, German.] A man that sells provisions and liquor in a camp.

I shall sutler be

Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Send to the sutler's; there you're sure to find
The bully match'd with rascals of his kind.

Dryden.

SUTURATED.* adj. [from sutura, Lat.] Stitched or knit together.

These are by oculists called "orbitea;" and are each of them compounded of six several bones, which, being most conveniently suturated among themselves, do make up those curious arched chambers in which these lookers or beholders dwell; in which, and from which, they may be lapply said to perform their offices.

Smith on Old Age, p. 93.

SUTURE.† n. s. [suture, Fr. sutura, Lat.]

1. A manner of sewing or stitching, particularly of stitching wounds.

Wounds, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inoculation: to maintain this situation, several sorts of sutures have been invented; those now chiefly described are the interrupted, the gloves, the quill'd, the twisted and the dry sutures, but the interrupted and twisted are almost the only useful ones. Sharp, Surgery.

2. A particular articulation: the bones of the cranium are joined to one another by four sutures. Quincy.

Many of our vessels degenerate into ligaments, and the sutures of the skull are abolished in old age. Arbuthnot.

SWAB. n. s. [swabb, Swedish.] A kind of mop to clean floors.

To SWAB. v. a. [ɣebban, Saxon.] To clean with a mop. It is now used chiefly at sea.

He made him swab the deck. Shelock's Voyage.

SWABBER. n. s. [swabber, Dutch.] A sweeper of the deck.

The master, the swabber, the boatswain and I,
Lov'd Mall, Meg, and Marrian, and Margery.

Shakespeare.

Was any thing wanting to the extravagance of this degenerate age, but the making a tarpawlin and a swabber the hero of a tragedy? Dennits.

SWAD.* n. s. [from ɣeban, Sax. fasciare, quia scil. folliculis, tanquam fasciis, pisa obvolvunt. Skinner.]

1. A peasecod. Still a northern word.

Take pulse out of the swads.

Colgrave, in V. Goussoyiller.

2. A squab, or short fat person.

Now I remember me,

There was one busy fellow was the leader,

A blunt squat swad, but lower than yourself.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

To SWADDLE.† v. a. [ɣeban, Saxon.]

1. To swathe; to bind in clothes, generally used of binding new-born children.

Invested by a veil of clouds,
And swaddled as new-born in sable shrouds;
For these a receptacle I design'd. Sardys.

Where [in the heart] sin is, (as our Saviour tells us) first conceived and brought forth, before it is nourished, suckled, or swaddled, in the gifts of God, either natural or artificial.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 30.

How soon doth man decay!

When cloths are taken from a chest of sweets,

To swaddle infants, whose young breath

Scarce knows the way;
Those clouts are little winding sheets,
Which do consign and send them unto death.

Herbert.

They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, till they had wrapt me in about an hundred yards of swathe.

Addison.

2. To beat; to cudgel. A low ludicrous
word.

A carter had overthrown his cart, and sate in the way crying, Help, Hercules: at last, Hercules, or one in his likeness, came to him, and swaddled him thriftily with a good cudgel; and said, Thou very lazy silly fellow, callest thou to me for help, and dost nothing thyself? Arise, set to thy shoulder, and heave thy part, and then pray to me to help thee; and I will do the rest.

Sir J. Harr. Bar. View Ch. of Eng. (1653.) p. 70.
Great on the bench, great in the saddle.

That could as well bind o'er as swaddle. Hudibras, swADDLE.† n. s. [Sax. þwæðil.] Clothes bound round the body.

I begged them to uncase me: no, no, say they;
and upon that carried me to one of their houses,
and put me to bed in all my swaddles. Addison.

swADDLINGBAND. } n. s. [from swadswADDLINGCLOTH. } dle.] Cloth wrapswADDLINGCLOUT. } ped round a newborn child.

From thence a fairy thee unweeting reft,
There as thou slept'st in tender swaddlingband,
And her base elfin brood, there for thee left:
Such men do changelings call, so chang'd by fairies theft. Spenser.

That great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddlingclouts. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
The swaddlingbands were purple, wrought with gold. Dryden.

To SWAG. v. n. [þgan, Sax. swægia, Ice-landick.] To sink down by its weight;
to hang heavy. See To SAG.

They are more apt, in swagging down, to pierce with their points, than in the jacent posture, and crevice the wall. Wotton.

Being a tall fish, and with his sides much compressed, he hath a long fin upon his back, and another answering to it on his belly; by which he is the better kept upright, or from swagging on his sides. Crew.

swAGBELLIED.* adj. [swag and belly.]
Having a large belly.

Your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied Hollander are nothing to your English.

Shakspeare, Othello.

To SWAGE.† v. a. [from assuage; which see.] To ease; to soften; to mitigate;
to appease; to quiet.

Thei, seinge these thingis, unnethis swagiden the people that thei offendid not to them.

Wicliffe, Acts, xiv.

Apt words have power to swage
The tumours of a troubled mind,
And are as balm to fester'd wounds. Milton, S. A.

Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage
With solemne touches, troubled thoughts, and chase

Anguish, and doubt, and fear from mortal minds.
Milton, P. L.

I will love thee,
Though my distracted senses should forsake me,*
I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart
Should swage itself, and be let loose to thine.

Olway.

To SWAGE.* v. n. To abate.

It swageth, or waxeth cold. Barret, Alb. 1580.
Where salt and fresh the pool renews,
As spring or drought, increase or swage.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

To swAGGER. v. n. [swadderden, Dutch, to make a noise; þpezan, Saxon.] To bluster; to bully; to be turbulently and tumultuously proud and insolent.

Drunk? squabble? swagger? and discourse fustian with one's own shadow? Oh thou invincible spirit of wine! Shakspeare.

'Tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive; a rascal that swagger'd with me last night. Shakspeare.

The lesser size of mortals love to swagger for opinions, and to boast infallibility of knowledge.

Glanville, Scopsis.

Many such asses in the world huff, look big, stare, dress, cock, and swagger at the same noisy rate. L'Estrange.

He chuck'd,

And scarcely deign'd to set a foot to ground,
But swagger'd like a lord. Dryden.

Confidence, how weakly soever founded, hath some effect upon the ignorant, who think there is something more than ordinary in a swaggering man, that talks of nothing but demonstration. Tillotson.

To be great, is not to be starched, and formal, and supercilious; to swagger at our footmen, and browbeat our inferiors. Collier on Pride.

What a pleasure is it to be victorious in a cause! to swagger at the bar! for a lawyer I was born, and a lawyer I will be.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

To swAGGER.* v. a. To overbear with boasting or bluster.

An argument of no small weight; but how one of the more rude and unwhewn opposers of pre-existence swaggers it out of countenance, I think it not amiss to set down.

Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682.) p. 9.

swAGGERER. n. s. [from swagger.] A blusterer; a bully; a turbulent noisy fellow.

He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater: you may stroke him as gentle as a puppy greyhound.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

swAGGY. adj. [from swag.] Dependent by its weight.

The beaver is called animal ventricosum, from his swaggy and prominent belly.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

swAIN.† n. s. [þwein, Saxon and Runick;
swen, Su. Goth. puer, minister; swaina,
Lappon. famulus; þpan, Sax. bubulcus.
See Lye, and Serenius.]

1. A young man.

That good knight would not so nigh repair,
Himself estranging from their joyance vain,
Whose fellowship seem'd far unfit for warlike swain.

Spenser.

2. A country servant employed in husbandry.

It were a happy life

To be no better than a homely swain.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Let states, that aim at greatness, take heed how their nobility and gentlemen do multiply too fast.
For that maketh the common subject grow to be a peasant and base swain, driven out of heart, and in effect but a gentleman's labourer.

Bacon, Ess. 29.

3. A pastoral youth.

Blest swains! whose nymphs in every grace excel;

Blest nymphs! whose swains those graces sing so well. Pope.

Leave the meer country to meer country swains,
And dwell where life in all life's glory reigns.

Harte.

swA'INISH.* adj. [from swain.] Rustick;
ignorant.

[It] argues both a gross and shallow judgement, and withal an ungentele and swainish breast.

Milton, Apol. for Smeectymn.

swA'INMOT.*† n. s. [swainmotus, law Lat.
Dr. Johnson. — From þpan, Sax. bubulcus; swainmote, curia quædam forestæ, ita dicta, quasi ministorum forestæ, scil.

agistorum aliorumque conventus. Lye, edit. Manning, in V. Span.] A court touching matters of the forest, kept by the charter of the forest thrice in the year. This court of swainmote is as incident to a forest, as the court of pie-powder is to a fair. The swainmote is a court of freeholders within the forest.

Cowel.

A forest hath her court of attachments, swain- mote-court, &c. Howell, Lett. iv. 16.

To swAIP.* v. n. To walk proudly: our northern dialect for sweep.

To swALE.† v. n. [þwelan, Saxon, to kindle; to burn.] To waste or blaze away; to melt: as the candle swales. Dr. Johnson. — This is a very old word; and is also still used in the north of England.

Men swaliden with great heete.

Wicliffe, Revel. xvi.

Into his face the brond he foist, his huge beard
brent a light,
And sweating made a stinke.

Phaer, Transl. of Virg. Æn. 12. (1584.)

To swALE.* v. a. To consume; to waste.

Nor has our hymeneal torch

Yet lighted up his last most grateful sacrifice,
But dash'd with rain from eyes, and swail'd with sighs,

Burns dim.

Congreve, Mour. Bride.

swALE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A flame.

North. Grose.

swA'LETT.† n. s. [swall, Swed. the swell

Su. Goth. idem; sic dict. a Su. Goth.
swale, porticus, subdivale, quippè ubi nidum struere solet hæc avis. Serenius.]
A small bird of passage; or, as some say, a bird that lies hid and sleeps in the winter.

The swallow follows not summer more willingly than we your lordships. Shakspeare, Tinton.

Dafodils.

That come before the swallow dares. Shakspeare.
The swallows make use of celendine, and the linnet of euphrasia. More.

When swallow's fleet soar high and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

To swALLOW.† v. a. [þpelzan, Saxon;
swelgen, Dutch. See also Spegel's Su.
Goth. Gloss. swaelia, ant. swelgia; Dan.
swelle.]

1. To take down the throat.

If little faults

Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,

Whose capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,

Appear before us? Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Men are, at a venture, of the religion of the country; and must therefore swallow down opinions, as silly people do empiricks' pills, and have nothing to do but believe that they will do the cure. Locke.

2. To receive without examination.

Consider and judge of it as a matter of reason, and not swallow it without examination as a matter of faith. Locke.

3. To engross; to appropriate: often with up emphatical.

Far be it from me, that I should swallow up or destroy. 2 Sam.

Homer excels all the inventors of other arts in this, that he has swallowed up the honour of those who succeeded him. Pope.

4. To absorb; to take in; to sink in any abyss; to engulf: with up.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, though the yesty waves Confound and swallow navigation up. Shaks.

SWAMP.† n. s. [swamm, Goth. a sponge; pan, Sax. swamm, Icelandic; swamme, Dutch; swomp, Danish; swamp, Swed.]

A marsh; a bog; a fen.

Behold the duteous son, the sire decay'd, The modest matron, and the blushing maid, Forc'd from their homes, a melancholy train, To traverse climes beyond the western main; Where wild Oswego spreads her swamps around, And Niagara stuns with thundering sound. Goldsmith, Traveller.

To SWAMP.† v. a. To whelm or sink as in a swamp. A modern word.

SWAMPY. adj. [from swamp.] Boggy; fenny.

Swampy fens breathe destructive myriads. Thomson.

SWAN.† n. s. [pan, Saxon; swan, Dan. swaen, Dutch; cycnus, Lat. from the Celt. gwyn, white, Wachter.]

The swan is a large water-fowl, that has a long neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young. Its legs and feet are black, as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it: the two sides below its eyes are black and shining like ebony. Swans use wings like sails, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the water. They feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years. There is a species of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of music, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was nearly expiring; a tradition, generally received, but fabulous. Calmel.

With untainted eye Compare her face with some that I shall show, And I will make thee think thy swan a crow. Shakespeare.

Let music sound, while he doth make his choice;

Then if he lose, he makes a swan-like end. Shaks.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,

Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;

A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky,

Like that of swans remurmuring to the floods. Dryden.

The idea, which an Englishman signifies by the name of swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise. Locke.

SWANSKIN. n. s. [swan and skin.] A kind of soft flannel, imitating for warmth the down of a swan.

To SWAP.† v. a. [swipa, Icel. to snatch; ppan, Sax. to sweep.] To strike with a long or sweeping stroke; to strike against; to throw violently.

His head to the wall, his body to the ground, Fall off he swapt. Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iv. 245.

Swap off his head, this is my sentence here. Chaucer, Sec. Nonnes Tale.

He straight

Swaps off the head with his presumptuous iron. Grimoald, in Tottel's Songs, &c. (1557.)

To SWAP.† v. n.

1. To fall down.

Al suddenly she swapt adoun to ground. Chaucer, Cl. Tale.

2. To ply the wings with noise; to strike the air.

When fowls fly by, and with their swapping wings

Beat the inconstant air. More, Immort. of the Soul, l. i. 11.

SWAP.† n. s. [from the verb.] A blow;

a stroke. Prompt. Parv.

If't be a thwack, I make account of that;

There's no new fashion'd swap that e'er came up yet,

But I've the first on 'em. Beaumont and Fl. Nice Valour.

SWAP.† adv. [from the verb.] Hastily;

with hasty violence; as, he did it swap.

It seems to be of the same original with sweep. A low word.

To SWAP.† v. a. To exchange. See To SWOP.

Thy works purchase thee more Than they can swappe their heritages for. Verses, Pref. to J. Hall's Poems, (1646.)

SWARD.† n. s. [sward, Swedish; rpeapb, Sax. cutis.]

1. The skin of a bacon.

Brandish no swords but swards of bacon! Brewer, Com. of Lingua, A. 2. S. 1.

2. The surface of the ground: whence green sward, or green sword.

Water, kept too long, loosens and softens the sward, makes it subject to rushes and coarse grass. Note on Tusser.

The noon of night was past, and then the face dreaddless o'er the level sward, that lies

Between the wood and the swift streaming Ouse. A. Philips.

To plant a vineyard in July, when the earth is very dry and combustible, plow up the sward, and burn it. Mortimer.

To SWARD.† v. n. [from the noun.] To breed a green turf.

The clays that are long in swarding, and little subject to weeds, are the best land for clover. Mortimer.

SWARE. The preterite of swear.

SWARM.† n. s. [ryeapm, Saxon; swerm, Dutch; swaerm, Swed. swaerma, tumultuari, ab antiq. hurra, in gyrum agitari. Stiernh. and Serenius.]

1. A great body or number of bees or other small animals, particularly those bees that migrate from the hive.

A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky,

Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight. Dryden, Æn.

2. A multitude; a crowd.

From this swarm of fair advantages,

You grip'd the general sway into your hand. Shakspeare.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms

that had settled themselves in every part of it, they would amount to more than can be found. Addison on Italy.

This swarm of themes that settles on my pen,

Which I, like summer-flies shake off again;

Let others sing. Young.

To SWARM. v. n. [rpeapman, Sax. swermen, Dutch.]

1. To rise as bees in a body and quit the hive.

All hands employ'd,

Like labouring bees on a long summer's day;

Some sound the trumpet for the rest to swarm. Dryden.

When bees hang in swarming time, they will presently rise, if the weather hold. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.

The merciless Macdonnel,

The multiplying villanies of nature

Do swarm upon. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Our superfluous lacqueys, and our peasants,

Who in unnecessary action swarm

About our squares of battle. Shaks. Hen. V.

What a multitude of thoughts at once

Awaken'd in me swarm, while I consider

What from within I feel myself, and hear

What from without comes often to my ears. Milton, P. R.

Then mounts the throne, high plac'd before the shrine; Dryden, Æn.

In crowds around the swarming people join.

3. To be crowded; to be over-run; to be thronged.

These garrisons you have now planted throughout all Ireland, and every place swarms with soldiers. Spenser.

Her lower region swarms with all sort of fowl,
her rivers with fish, and her seas with whole shoals.

Howell.

Those days swarmed with fables, and from such ground took hints for fictions, poisoning the world ever after.

Brown.

Life swarms with ills, the boldest are afraid,
Where then is safety for a tender maid? Young.

4. To breed multitudes.

Not so thick swarm'd once the soil

5. It is used in conversation for climbing a tree, by embracing it with the arms and legs.

To SWARM.* v. a. To press close together, as bees in swarming; to throng.

Sorrow, in far more woeful wise,
Took on with plaint; upheaving to the skies
Her wretched hands, that with her cry the rout
Gan all in heaps to swarm us round about.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

How did thy senses quail,
Seeing the shores so swarm'd!

Fanshawe, Poems, (ed. 1676), p. 288.
Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spied.

Gay.

SWART. } adj. [swarts, Goth. ƿreapt,
SWARTH. } Sax. swart, Dutch.]

1. Black; darkly brown; tawny.

A nation strange, with visage swart,
And courage fierce, that all men did affray,
Through the world then swarmed in every part.

Spenser.

A man
Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,
That him full of melancholy did shew.

Spenser.

Whereas I was black and swart before;
With those clear rays which she infus'd on me,
That beauty am I blest with, which you see.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity.

Milton, Comus.

2. In Milton it seems to signify goblin; malignant. Dr. Johnson. — Not so; but merely to designate the dog-star. See the note of Mr. Warton on the passage in Lycidas.

Ye valleys low,

On whose fresh lap the swart star sparsely looks.

Milton, Lycidas.

To SWART. v. a. [from the noun.] To blacken; to dusk.

The heat of the sun may swart a living part, or even black a dead or dissolving flesh.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

SWARTH.* n. s. A row of grass or corn cut down by the mower; a different spelling of swath. See SWATH.

Phillips.

Here stretch'd in ranks the levell'd swarts are found.

Pope, Iliad.

SWARTH, or Swairth.* n. s. [perhaps from ƿreapt, Saxon; black, dark, pale, wan. Ray.] The apparition of a person about to die, as pretended in parts of the North.

There are the exact figures and resemblances of persons then living, often seen not only by their friends at a distance, but many times by themselves: of which there are several instances in Aubrey's Miscellanies. These apparitions are called fetches, and in Cumberland swarths; they most commonly appear to distant friends and relations, at the very instant preceding the death of the person, whose figure they put on. Sometimes there is a greater interval between the appearance and death.

Grose.

SWA'RTHLX. adv. [from swarthy.] Blackly; duskiy; tawnily.

SWA'RTINESS.† n. s. [from swarthy.] Darkness of complexion; tawiness.

Discontent disjoins mankind, and sends him,
with beasts, to the loneliness of untrod deserts,
who was by nature made a creature sociable.
Nor is it the mind alone that is thus mudded;
but even the body suffers: it thickens the complexion, and dyes it into an unpleasant swarthiness: the eye is dim in the discoloured face; and the whole man becomes as if statued into stone and earth.

Feltham, Res. i. 36.

SWA'RTNESS.* n. s. [from swarth.] Blackness; darkness.

The other cause of the swartheness of the church is sin.

Dr. Clarke's Sermon, (1637), p. 367.

SWA'RTHY. adj. [see SWART.] Dark of complexion; black; dusky; tawny.

Set me where, on some pathless plain,
The swarthy Africans complain.

Roscommon.

Though in the torrid climates the common colour is black or swarthy, yet the natural colour of the temperate climates is more transparent and beautiful.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Here swarthy Charles appears, and there
His brother with dejected air.

Addison.

Did they know Cato, our remotest kings
Would pour embattled multitudes about him;
Their swarthy hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim.

Addison.

To SWA'RTHY.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To blacken; to make swarthy or dusky.

Now will I and my man John swarthy our faces over as if that country's heat had made 'em so.

Cowley.

SWA'RTISH.* adj. [from swart.] Some- what dark or dusky; inclining to black.

Melancholy, that cold, dry, wretched saturnine humor, creepeth in with a leane, pale, or swarthy colour, which reigneth upon solitary, careful, musing men.

Bullein, Bulw. of Def. against Sickness, P. 4. (1579.)

SWA'RTINESS.* } n. s. [from swart.] Dark- SWA'RTNESS. } ness of colour, duski- ness. The first is in Sherwood's Dict.

The latter in the Prompt. Parv.

SWA'RTY.* adj. [from swart.] Swarthy: than which it is an older word.

From these first qualities arise many other second, as that of colour; black, swarty, pale, ruddy, &c.

Barton, Anat. of Mel. p. 179.

Divine Andate, thou who hold'st the reins
Of furious battles and disorder'd war,
And proudly roll'st thy swarty chariot-wheels
Over the heaps of wounds and carcases, &c.

Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

To SWARVE.* v. n. To swerve; which see.

So all at once they on the prince did thunder,
Who from his saddle swarved not aside.

Spenser, F. Q.

SWASH. n. s. [a cant word.] A figure, whose circumference is not round, but oval; and whose mouldings lie not at right angles, but oblique to the axis of the work.

Moxon.

To SWASH.† v. n. [perhaps from swaetsen, Lut. to make a shrill noise. Our old lexicographers define swash "to clash with swords and armour," Sherwood;
"to make a noise with swords against targets," Barret.] To make a great clatter or noise; to make a show of valour; to vapour; to bully: whence a swashbuckler. Not now in use.

We'll have a swashing and a martial outside,
As many other mannish cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances. Shaks.

Draw, if you be men: Gregory, remember thy swashing blow.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

SWASH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A blustering noise, in order to make a show of valour.

I will flaunt and brave it after the lusty swash.
The Three Ladies of London, (1584.)

against the devil.

Milton, Animado. Rem. Def.

SWA'SHER. n. s. [from swash.] One who makes a show of valour or force of arms.

Obsolete.

I have observed these three swashers; three such antics do not amount to a man.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

SWATCH. n. s. A swathe. Not in use.

One spreadeth those bands so in order to lie,
As barlie in swatches may fill it thereby.

Tusser.

SWAT.* } pret. of To sweat.

His hakeney — so swatte.

Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Prolog.

That far sought wealth, for which the noxious gale
He drew, and swate beneath equator suns.

Thomson, Britannia.

SWATH.† n. s. [swade, Dutch.]

1. A line of grass or corn cut down by the mower.

Prompt. Parv.

With tossing and raking, and setting on cox,
Grasse, lately in swathes, is meat for an ox. Tusser.

The strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath.

Shakspeare.

2. A continued quantity.

An affection'd ass, that cons state without book,
and utters it by great swaths.

Shaks. Tw. Night.

3. [Sueðe, ƿæðil, Sax. from ƿæban, to bind; so our old word was swaithel; then swaddle. See Huloet's Dict.] A band; a fillet.

An Indian comb, a stick whereof is cut into three sharp and round teeth four inches long: the other part is left for the handle, adorned with fine straws laid along the sides, and lapped round about it in several distinct swaths.

Grew.

Long pieces of linen they folded about me, till they had wrapped me in above an hundred yards of swathe.

Guardian.

To SWATHE.† v. a. [ƿæban, Saxon.]

1. To bind, as a child with bands and rollers.

He had two sons: the eldest of them at three years old,

In the swathing clothes the other, from their nursery
Were stol'n.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

Their children are never swathed, or bound about with any thing, when they are first born; but are put naked into the bed with their parents to lie.

Abbot, Descr. of the World.

Swath'd in her lap the bold nurse bore him out,
With olive branches cover'd round about.

Dryden.

Master's feet are swath'd no longer,
If in the night too oft he kicks,

Or shows his loco-motive tricks.

Prior.

2. To confine.

Who hath swathed in the great and proud ocean with a girdle of sand, and restrains the waves thereof?

Bp. Hopkins, Expos. p. 276.

To SWAY.† v. a. [schweben, German, to move; swaigja, Icel. to bend; swiga, Su.

Goth. the same; which Serenius deduces, prefixing s, from the ancient word vega, to move.]

1. To wave in the hand; to move or wield any thing massy: as, to sway the sceptre.

Glancing fire out of the iron play'd,

As sparkles from the anvil rise,

When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd.
Spenser.

2. To bias; to direct to either side.

Heav'n forgive them that so much have sway'd Your majesty's good thoughts away from me.

Shakespeare.

I took your hands; but was, indeed,
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar.

Shakespeare.

The only way t' improve our own,

By dealing faithfully with none;

As bows run true by being made

On purpose false, and to be sway'd.
Hudibras.

When examining these matters, let not temporal and little advantages sway you against a more durable interest.

Tillotson.

3. To govern; to rule; to overpower; to influence.

The lady's mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,

With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing.
Shakespeare.

The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
And reason says, you are the worthier maid.

Shakespeare.

On Europe thence, and where Rome was to sway The world.

Milton, P. L.

A gentle nymph, not far from hence,
That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream,

Sabrina is her name.
Milton, Comus.

Take heed lest passion sway Thy judgment to do ought, which else free will Would not admit.

Milton, P. L.

The judgment is swayed by passion, and stored with lubricious opinions, instead of clearly conceived truths.

Glanville.

This was the race
To sway the world, and land and sea subdue.

Dryden.

With these I went,
Nor idle stood with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd; yet those I sway'd With pow'rful speech: I spoke, and they obey'd.

Dryden.

They will do their best to persuade the world that no man acts upon principle, that all is swayed by particular malice.

The example of sundry churches, for approbation of one thing, doth sway much; but yet still as having the force of an example only, and not of a law.

Hooker.

3. To bear rule; to govern.

The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear.

Shakespeare.

Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
They never then had sprung like summer flies.

Shakespeare.

Aged tyranny sways not as it hath power, but as it is suffered.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Here thou shalt monarch reign;

There didst not: there let him still victor sway.

Milton, P. L.

4. To incline to one side.

This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light:—

Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea,
Forc'd by the tide to combat with the wind;
Now sways it that way, like the self-same sea
Forc'd to retire by fury of the wind.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

SWAY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The swing or sweep of a weapon.

To strike with huge two-handed sway.

Milton, P. L.

When to advance, or stand, or turn the sway

Of battle.

Milton, P. L.

4. Power; rule; dominion.

This sort had some fear that the filling up the seats in the consistory, with so great number of laymen, was but to please the minds of the people, to the end they might think their own sway somewhat.

Hooker.

Only retain

The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of th' hest,

Beloved sons, be yours. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Her father counts it dangerous

That she should give her sorrow so much sway,

And in his wisdom bastes our marriage,

To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.

Too truly Tamerlane's successors they;

Each thinks a world too little for his sway.

Dryden, Aureng.

When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,

The post of honour is a private station.

Addison, Cato.

5. Influence; direction; weight on one side.

An evil mind in authority doth not only follow the sway of the desires already within it, but frames to itself new desires, not before thought of.

Sidney.

In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none, saving that some fell sooner, and some later, from the soundness of belief.

Hooker.

They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway.

Dryden.

TO SWEAL.† See TO SWALE.

TO SWEAR. v. n. preter. swore or sware; part. pass. sworn. [swaran, Gothic; rypanan, Saxon; sweeren, Dutch.]

1. To obtest some superiour power; to utter an oath.

If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word.

Numbers.

Thee, thee an hundred languages shall claim,

And savage Indians swear by Anna's name.

Tickell.

2. To declare or promise upon oath.

We shall have old swearing

That they did give the rings away to men:

But we'll outface them, and outswear them too.

Shakespeare.

I gave my love a ring, and made him swear

Never to part with it; and here he stands,

I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,

Nor pluck it from his finger. Shakespeare.

I would have kept my word;

But, when I swear, it is irrevocable. Shakespeare.

Jacob said, swear to me; and he swore unto him.

Genesis.

Bacchus taken at Rhodes by Demetrius Poliorcetes, which he so esteemed, that, as Plutarch reports, he swore he had rather lose all his father's images than that table.

Peachment.

3. To give evidence upon oath.

At what ease

Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt
To swear against you? Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. To obtest the great name profanely.

Obeys thy parents, keep thy world justly;

Swear not.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

None so nearly disposed to scoffing at religion as those who have accustomed themselves to swear on trifling occasions.

Tillotson.

Hark! the shrill notes transpire the yielding air,
And teach the neighb'ring echoes how to swear.

Young.

TO SWEAR. v. a.

1. To put to an oath; to bind by an oath administered.

Moses took the bones of Joseph; for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel. Ex. xiii. 19.

Sworn assured, man, like a duck; I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Let me swear you all to secrecy;

And, to conceal my shame, conceal my life. Dryden.

2. To declare upon oath: as, He swore treason against his friend.

3. To obtest by an oath.

Now by Apollo, king, thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

— O vassal! miscreant! Shakespeare.

SWEARER. n. s. [from swear.] A wretch who obtests the great name wantonly and profanely.

And must they all be hang'd that swear and lie?

— Every one.

— Who must hang them?

— Why, the honest men.

— Then the liars and swearers are fools; for these are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men and hang them up.

Shakespeare.

Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in vain;

It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse:

Lust and wine plead a pleasure, avarice a gain;

But the cheap swearer through his open sluice

Lets his soul run for naught. Herbert.

Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer; for an oath, which is the end of controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce.

Brown.

It is the opinion of our most refined swearers, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true politeness, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person.

Swift, Polite Conversation.

SWEARING.* n. s. [from To swear.] The act of declaring upon oath; the act or practice of using profane oaths.

All those sayings will I over-swear,

And all those swearings keep as true in soul,

As doth that orb'd continent the fire

That severs day from night. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Because of swearing the land mourneth.

Jer. xxiii. 10.

SWEAT.† n. s. [peat, Saxon; swett, Goth. zet, Hebrew.]

1. The matter evacuated at the pores by heat or labour.

Sweat is salt in taste; for that part of the nourishment which is fresh and sweet, turneth into blood and flesh; and the sweat is that part which is excreted.

Bacon.

Some insensible effluvia, exhaling out of the stone, comes to be checked and condensed by the air on the superficies of it, as it happens to sweat on the skins of animals.

Boyle.

Soft on the flowery herb I found me laid

In balmy sweat. Milton, P. L.

When Lucilius brandishes his pen,

And flashes in the face of guilty men,

A cold sweat stands in drops on every part,

And rage succeeds to tears, revenge to smart.

Dryden.

Sweat is produced by changing the balance between the fluids and solids, in which health consists, so as that projectile motion of the fluids overcome the resistance of the solids. Arbuthnot.

2. Labour; toil; drudgery.

This painful labour of abridging was not easy, but a matter of sweat and watching. 2 Mac. ii. 26.
The field

To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd.

What from Jonson's oil and sweat did flow,
Or what more easy nature did bestow
On Shakespeare's gentler muse, in these full grown Their graces both appear. Denham.

3. Evaporation of moisture.

Beans give in the mow; and therefore those that are to be kept are not to be thrashed till March, that they have had a thorough sweat in the mow.

Mortimer, Husbandry.
TO SWEAT.† v. n. pret. swat or swate, swet, sweated; particip. pass. sweaten;
[prætan, Saxon.]

1. To be moist on the body with heat or labour.

Let them be free, marry them to your heirs,
Why sweat they under burdens?

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
Missress Page at the door, sweating and blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you.

When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
About this time in autumn, there reigned in the city and other parts of the kingdom a disease then new; which, of the accidents and manner thereof, they called the sweating sickness.

Bacon, Hen. VII.
A young tall squire
Did from the camp at first before him go;
At first he did, but scarce could follow straight,
Sweating beneath a shield's unruly weight. Cowley.

2. To toil; to labour; to drudge.

How the drudging goblin swet
To earn his cream bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thrash'd the corn.

Milton, L'Allegro.
Our author, not content to see
That others write as carelessly as he;
Though he pretends not to make things complete,
Yet, to please you, he'd have the poets sweat.

3. To emit moisture.

Waincoats will sweat so that they run with water.

TO SWEAT. v. a.

1. Covered with sweat; moist with sweat.
The rabblement hooted and clapped their choppy'd hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf.
Milton, P. L.

2. Consisting of sweat.

And then, so nice, and so genteel,
Such cleanliness from head to heel;
No humours gross, or frowzy steams;
No noisome whiffs, or sweaty streams.

3. Laborious; toilsome.

Those who labour
The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleaming armour,
Acknowledge Vulcan's aid.

Prior.

SWEDE.* n. s.

1. A native of Sweden.

What the Suede intends, and what the French.
Milton, Sonnet.

2. The familiar word for a Swedish turnip.

SWEDESH.* adj. Respecting the Swedes.

TO SWEEP.† v. a. pret. and part. pass.

swept. [prapan, præpan, Saxon.]

1. To drive away with a besom.

2. To clean with a besom.

What woman, having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one, doth not sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it? St. Luke, xv. 8.

3. To carry with pomp.

Let frankic Talbot triumph for a while,
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
4. To drive or carry off with celerity and violence.

Though I could,
With barefac'd power, sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not.

Shakespeare.
The river of Kishon swept them away.

Judges, v.
The blustering winds striving for victory, swept the snow from off the tops of those high mountains, and cast it down upon the plains in such abundance, that the Turks lay as men buried alive.

Knolles, Hist.
Flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow;
They miss or sweep but common souls away;
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay. Waller.

My looking is the fire of pestilence,
That sweeps at once the people and the prince.

Dryden.
I have already swept the stakes, and with the common good fortune of prosperous gamesters can be content to sit.

Dryden.
Is this the man who drives me before him
To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rub-bish?

Dryden.
Fool! time no change of motion knows;
With equal speed the torrent flows

To sweep fame, power, and wealth away:
The past is all by death possest,
And frugal fate that guards the rest,

By giving, bids them live, to-day. Fenton.
A duke holding in a great many hands, drew a huge heap of gold; but never observed a sharper, who under his arm swept a great deal of it into his hat.

5. To pass over with celerity and force.

Then sweep they the blue waves.

May, Luc. B. 3.

6. To rub over.

Their long descending train
With rubies edg'd, and sapphires swept the plain.

Dryden.

7. To strike with a long stroke.

Descend, ye nine; descend, and sing;
The breathing instruments inspire,
Wake into voice each silent string,
And sweep the sounding lyre.

Pope.

TO SWEEP. v. n.

1. To pass with violence, tumult, or swiftness. Perhaps in the first quotation we should read swoop.

Haste me to know it, that I with wings as swift
As meditation or the thoughts of love
May sweep to my revenge.

Shakespeare.
A poor man that oppresseth the poor, is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food.

Prov. xxviii. 3.

Cowen in her course
Tow'rd's the Sabrinian shores, as sweeping from her source,

Takes Tow'a. Drayton.

Before tempestuous winds arise,
Stars shooting through the darkness gild the night
With sweeping glories and long trails of light.

Dryden.

2. To pass with pomp; to pass with an equal motion.

She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,

More like an empress than duke Humphrey's wife.

Shakespeare.
In gentle dreams I often will be by,
And sweep along before your closing eye.

3. To move with a long reach.

Nor always errs; for oft the gauntlet draws
A sweeping stroke along the crackling jaws.

Dryden.

SWEEP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of sweeping.

2. The compass of any violent or continued motion.

A door drags when by its ill hanging on its hinges, or by the ill boarding of the room, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor.

Mozon, Mech. Es.
A torrent swell'd
With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds, Breaking away impetuous, and involves
Within its sweep, trees, houses, men.

Philips.
3. Violent and general destruction.

In countries subject to great epidemical sweeps, men may live very long; but where the proportion of the chonical distemper is great, it is not likely to be so.

4. Direction of any motion not rectilinear.

Having made one incision a little circularly, begin a second, bringing it with an opposite sweep to meet the other.

Sharp.
SWEEPER.† n. s. [from sweep.] One that sweeps.

Barret.

SWEEPINGS. n. s. [from sweep.] That which is swept away.

Should this one broomstick enter the scene, covered with dust, though the sweepings of the finest lady's chamber, we should despise its vanity.

Swift.

SWEEPNET. n. s. [sweep and net.] A net that takes in a great compass.

She was a sweepnet for the Spanish ships, which happily fell into her net.

Camden.

SWEESTAKE.† n. s. [sweep and stake.] Originally perhaps a game at cards: it is now applied to the winner of the whole that is staked or wagered, and is a common phrase at horse-races, usually called sweepstakes.

Here are the cards, what shall we play at?—At trumps?—Let that be for old men.—Less will the play of chilindron like you.—That is for women by the fire side.—It is not, but that you will not have any game of virtue but sweep-stake play.

Minshew, Span. Dict. Dial. (1599), p. 25.

Is't writ in your revenge,
That sweetstake you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser? Shakespeare.

The house of commons were resolved to practise on the church by little and little, and at the last to play with sweetstake, and take all together.
Heylin, Hist. of the Presbyterians, p. 439.

SWEET'PY.† adj. [from sweep.]

1. Passing with great speed and violence over a great compass at once.

They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway.
Dryden.

2. Wavy.

Behind
The sweepy crest hung floating in the wind.
Pope, Iliad.

3. Strutting; drawn out.

Behold their swelling dugs; the sweepy weight
Of ewes, that sink beneath their milky freight.
Dryden, Ov.

Or spread his sweepy train.

Watts on Job's Peacock, Posth. Works.
SWEET.† adj. [pete, Sax. soet, Dutch.
Our old word was sute, sote, or soote.
"My preaching was not in sutely styrynge wordis of manny's wisdom." Wic- liffe, 1 Cor. ii. "On the sote grasse I sate me down." Chaucer, Fl. and Leaf.
"They dauncen deffily, and singen soote."
Spenser, Shep. Cal.]

1. Pleading to any sense.

Sweet expresses the pleasant perceptions of almost every sense: sugar is sweet, but it hath not the same sweetness as music; nor hath music
the sweetness of a rose, and a sweet prospect differs from them all: nor yet have any of these the same sweetness as discourse, counsel, or meditation hath; yet the royal palmist saith of a man, we took sweet counsel together; and of God, my meditation of him shall be sweet.
Watts.

2. Luscious to the taste.

This honey tasted still is ever sweet. Davies.

3. Fragrant to the smell.

Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet.
Shakespeare.

Where a rainbow hangeth over or toucheth,
there breatheth a sweet smell; for that this happeneth but in certain matters which have some sweetness which the dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.

Shred very small with thime, sweet-marjoram, and a little winter savoury. Walton, Angler.

Lament the ceasing of a *sweet*er breath. Pope.

The streets with treble voices ring,
To sell the bounteous product of the spring;
Sweet-smelling flowers, and elders early bud. Gay.

4. Melodious to the ear.

The dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop.

Her speech is grac'd with sweeter sound
Than in another's song is found. Waller.

No more the streams their murmurs shall forbear

A sweeter music than their own to hear;
But tell the reeds, and tell the vocal shore,
Fair Daphne's dead, and music is no more. Pope.

5. Beautiful to the eye.

Heav'n bless thee!
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.
Shakespeare.

6. Not salt.

The white of an egg, or blood mingled with salt water, gathers the saltiness, and maketh the water sweeter; this may be by adhesion.

The sails drop with rain,
Sweet waters mingle with the briny main. Dryden.

7. Not sour.

Time changeth fruits from more sour to more sweet; but contrariwise liquors, even those that are of the juice of fruit, from more sweet to more sour. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Trees whose fruit is acid last longer than those whose fruit is sweet. Bacon.

When metals are dissolved in acid menstrua, and the acids in conjunction with the metal act after a different manner, so that the compound has a different taste, much milder than before, and sometimes a sweet one; is it not because the acids adhere to the metallic particles, and thereby lose much of their activity? Newton, Opt.

8. Mild; soft; gentle.

Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency, and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness.

The Pleiades before him danc'd, Shedding sweet influence. Milton, P. L.

Mercy has, could Mercy's self be seen,
No sweeter look than this propitious queen. Waller.

9. Grateful; pleasing.

Nothing so sweet as is our country's earth,
And joy of those, from whom we claime our birth.

Sweet interchange of hill and valley.
Milton, P. L.

Than whom the Trojan host
No fairer face or sweeter air could boast.

Dryden, Æn.

10. Not stale; not stinking: as, that meat is sweet.

SWEET. n. s.

1. Sweetness; something pleasing.

Pluck out
The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Shaks. Coriol.

What softer sounds are these salute the ear,
From the large circle of the hemisphere,
As if the center of all sweets met here! B. Jonson.

If every sweet and every grace
Must fly from that forsaken face. Carew.

Hail! wedded love,
Perpetual fountain of domestic sweets!

Milton, P. L.

Taught to live
The easiest way; nor with perplexing thoughts
To interrupt the sweet of life. Milton, P. L.

Now since the Latian and the Trojan brood
Have tasted vengeance, and the sweets of blood, Speak. Dryden, Æn.

Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life?

Dryden.

We have so great an abhorrence of pain, that a little of it extinguishes all our pleasures; a little bitter mingled in our cup leaves no relish of the sweet. Locke.

Love had ordain'd that it was Abra's turn

To mix the sweets, and minister the urn. Prior.

2. A word of endearment.

Sweet! leave me here awhile,
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakespeare.

Wherefore frowns my sweet?
Have I too long been absent from these lips?
B. Jonson.

3. A perfume.

As in perfumes,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost;
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all:
So she was all a sweet. Dryden.

Flowers
Innumerable, by the soft south-west
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands,
Rebound their sweets from th' odoriferous pavement. Prior.

SWEETBREAD. n. s. The pancreas of the calf.

Never tie yourself always to eat meats of easy
digesture, as veal, pullets, or sweetbread.

Harvey on Consump.
Sweetbread and collops were with skewers prick'd
About the sides; imbibing what they deck'd.
Dryden.

When you roast a breast of veal, remember your sweetheart, the butler, loves a sweetbriar. Swift.

SWEETBRIAR. n. s. [sweet and briar.] A fragrant shrub.

For March come violets and peach-tree in blossom, the cornelian-tree in blossom, and sweetbriar.

herb. Ainsworth.

SWEETCELY. n. s. [myrrhus, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

SWEETCYSTUS.* n. s. A shrub, called also gum-cistus. Mason.

A better claim sweet-cistus may pretend,
Whose sweating leaves a fragrant balsam send.
Tate's Cowley.

To SWEETEN. v. a. [from sweet.]

1. To make sweet.

The world the garden is, she is the flower
That sweetens all the place; she is the guest
Of rarest price. Sidney.

Here is the smell of the blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.
Shakespeare.

Give me an ounce of civet to sweeten my imagination. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

With fairest flowers, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Be humbly minded, know your post;
Sweeten your tea, and watch your toast. Swift.

2. To make mild or kind.

All kindnesses descend upon such a temper, as rivers of fresh waters falling into the main sea;
the sea swallows them all, but is not changed or sweetened by them. South.

Devotion softens his heart, enlightens his mind, sweetens his temper, and makes every thing that comes from him instructive, amiable, and affecting.
Lavo.

3. To make less painful.

She, the sweetness of my heart, even sweetens the death which her sweetness brought upon me.

Thou shalt secure her helpless sex from harms,
And she thy cares will sweeten with her charms.
Dryden.

Interest of state and change of circumstances may have sweetened these reflections to the politest sort, but impressions are not so easily worn out of the minds of the vulgar. Addison.

Thy mercy sweeten'd every soul,
Made every region please;
The hoary Alpine hills it warm'd,
And smooth'd the Tyrrhene seas. Addison.

4. To palliate; to reconcile.

These lessons may be gilt and sweetened as we order pills and potions, so as to take off the disgust of the remedy. L'Estrange.

5. To make grateful or pleasing.

I would have my love
Angry sometimes, to sweeten off the rest
Of her behaviour. B. Jonson, Catiline.

6. To soften; to make delicate.

Correggio has made his memory immortal, by the strength he has given to his figures, and by sweetening his lights and shadows, and melting them into each other so happily, that they are even imperfectible. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

To SWEETEN. v. n. To grow sweet.

Where a wash hath bitten in a grape, or any fruit, it will sweeten hastily. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

SWEETENER. n. s. [from sweeten.]

1. One that palliates; one that represents things tenderly.

- But you who, till your fortune's made,
Must be a sweetener by your trade,
Must swear he never meant us ill. Swift.
Those softeners, sweeteners, and compounders, shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.
2. That which contemperate acrimony.
Powder of crabs' eyes and claws, and burnt egg-shells, are prescribed as sweeteners of any sharp humours. Temple.
- SWEETHEART. n. s. [sweet and heart.] A lover or mistress.
Mistress, retire yourself
Into some covert; take your sweethearts,
And pluck o'er your brows. Shakespeare.
Sweetheart, your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose. Shakespeare.
One thing, sweetheart, I will ask,
Take me for a new-fashion'd mask. Cleaveland.
A wench was wringing her hands and crying;
she had newly parted with her sweetheart.
L'Estrange.
She interprets all your dreams for these,
Foretells the estate, when his rich uncle dies,
And sees a sweetheart in the sacrifice. Dryden, Jun.
- SWEETING. n. s. [from sweet.]
1. A sweet luscious apple.
A child will chuse a sweetener because it is presently fair and pleasant, and refuse a runnet, because it is then green, hard, and sour.
Ascham, Schoolmaster.
2. A word of endearment.
Trip no further, pretty sweetening;
Journeys end in lovers meeting. Shakespeare.
- SWEETISH. adj. [from sweet.] Somewhat sweet.

errand, quickly returned. Sidney.
Why all the charges of the nuptial feast,
Wine and desserts, and sweetmeats to digest.
Dryden.
There was plenty, but the dishes were ill sorted;
whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women;
but little solid meat for men. Dryden.
Make your transparent sweetmeats truly nice,
With Indian sugar and Arabian spice.
King, Cookery.
If a child cries for any unwholesome fruit, you purchase his quiet by giving him a less hurtful sweetmeat: this may preserve his health, but spoils his mind. Locke.
At a lord-mayor's feast, the sweetmeats do not make appearance till people are cloyed with beef and mutton. Addison.
They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands

- by, will not suffer them to bring any presents of toys or sweetmeats. Swift.
- SWEETNESS. n. s. [from sweet; Saxon, prethce.] Not often found in the plural; nor has Dr. Johnson given a single example of it in that number.
The eloquent Jeremy Taylor now supplies one.] The quality of being sweet in any of its senses; fragrance; melody; lusciousness; deliciousness; agreeable-ness; delightfulness; gentleness of manners; mildness of aspect.

lour that is fit and due to the dignity of a man, to the beauty of a woman, to the sweetness of a young babe. Ascham.
O our lives' sweetness!
That we the pain of death would hourly bear,
Rather than die at once. Shaks. K. Lear.
Where a rainbow toucheth, there breatheth forth a sweet smell: for this happeneth but in certain matters, which have in themselves some sweetness, which the gentle dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.
Whosoever obeys the laws of Jesus, bears with the infirmities of his relatives and society, seeks with sweetness to remedy what is ill, and to prevent what it may produce, and throws water upon a spark. Bp. Taylor, Gr. Exempl. P. iii. Disc. 15.
His sweetness of carriage is very particularly remembered by his contemporaries. Fell.
Serene and clear harmonious Horace flows,
With sweetness not to be express in prose.
Roscommon.
Suppose two authors equally sweet, there is a great distinction to be made in sweetness; as in that of sugar and that of honey. Dryden.
This old man's talk, though honey flow'd
In every word, would now lose all its sweetness.
Addison.
Praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness
join. Pope.
A man of good education, excellent understanding, and exact taste; these qualities are adorned with great modesty and a most amiable sweetness of temper. Swift.

myrtle.
- TO SWELL. v. n. part. pass. swollen.
[ypellan, Sax. swollen, Dutch.]
1. To grow bigger; to grow turgid; to extend the parts.
Ropitious Tyber smooth'd his watery way,
He roll'd his river back, and pois'd he stood,
A gentle swelling and a peaceful flood.
Dryden, Æn.
2. To tumify by obstruction.
Strangely visited people,
All swoll'n and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Swoll'n is his breast; his inward pains encrease,
All means are us'd, and all without success.
Dryden.
3. To be exasperated.
My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,
My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs.
Shakespeare.
4. To look big.
Here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.
Shakespeare.

5. To be turgid. Used of style.
Peleus and Telephus, exil'd and poor,
Forget their swelling and gigantick wounds.
Roscommon.
6. To protuberate.
This iniquity shall be as a breach ready to fall,
swelling out in a high wall. Isa. xxx. 13.
7. To rise into arrogance; to be elated.
In all things else above our humble fate,
Your equal mind yet swells not into state. Dryden.
8. To be inflated with anger.
I will help every one from him that swelleth against him, and will set him at rest. Ps. xii. 6.
We have made peace of enmity
Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers.
Shakespeare.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shaks.
9. To grow upon the view.
O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene.
Shakespeare.
10. It implies commonly a notion of something wrong.
Immoderate valour swells into a fault. Addison.
- TO SWELL. v. a.
1. To cause to rise or increase; to make tumid.
Wind, blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main. Shaks.
You who supply the ground with seeds of grain,
And you who swell those seeds with kindly rain.
Dryden.
2. To aggravate; to heighten.
It is low ebb with his accuser, when such peccadilloes are put to swell the charge. Atterbury.
3. To raise to arrogance.
All these miseries proceed from the same natural causes which have usually attended kingdoms swollen with long plenty, pride, and excess.
Clarendon.
The king of men, who, swollen with pride,
Refus'd his presents, and his prayers deny'd.
Dryden.
- SWELL. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Extension of bulk.
The swan's down feather,
That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
And neither way inclines. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.
2. The fluctuating motion of the sea, after the expiration of a storm; and also, the surf.
[Swall, Su. Goth. æstus maris.]
SWELLING. n. s. [from swell.]
1. Morbid tumour.
There is not a chronic disease that more frequently introduces the distemper I am discoursing of, than strumous or scrophulous swellings or ulcers. Blackmore.
2. Protuberance; prominence.
The superfluities of such plates are not even, but have many cavities and swellings, which, how shallow soever, do a little vary the thickness of the plate. Newton, Opt.
3. Effort for a vent.
My heart was torn in pieces to see the husband suppressing and keeping down the swellings of his grief. Taller.
TO SWELL. v. n. To break out in sweat,
if that be the meaning. Dr. Johnson.—
I rather take it for a poetical variation of swelled. Mason.
With huge impatience he swells in sweat.
Spenser, F. Q.
Chearful blood in faintness chill'd did melt,
Which, like a fever fit, through all his body swell.
Spenser, F. Q.

To SWELT.* v. n. [ſwɛltan, Sax. to die; swiltan, Gothick; or perhaps from swelten, vet. Fland. deficere, languescere. Kilian.] To faint; to swoon. Still a northern expression.

Woe that made his heart to swelt.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iii. 348.
The knights swelt for lack of shade.

Chaucer, Fl. and Leaf, ver. 360.

Her dear heart high swelt : —

Then when she look'd about, —

She almost fell again into a swoon.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 9.

To SWELT.* v. a. To overpower as with heat; to cause to faint. This, according to Mr. Pegge, is at present a Derbyshire term.

Is the sun to be blamed that the traveller's cloak swelts him with heat? Bp. Hall, Soliloq. 74.

To SWEALTER.† v. n. [This is supposed to be corrupted from sultry. Dr. Johnson.—It may rather be deduced from swelt. Our old lexicography defines it "to swoon for heat or other causes." Prompt. Parv. But Dr. Jamieson deduces it from the Icel. swaela, swaelit, suffocare.] To be pained with heat.

If the sun's excessive heat

Makes our bodies swelter,

To an osier hedge we get

For a friendly shelter;

There we may

Think and pray,

Before death

Stops our breath. Chalkhill.

To SWEALTER. v. a. To parch, or dry up with heat.

Some would always have long nights and short days; others again long days and short nights; one climate would be scorched and sweltered with everlasting dog-days, while an eternal December blasted another. Bentley, Sermon.

SWEALTRY. adj. [from swelter.] Suffocating with heat.

SWEPT. The participle and preterite of sweep.

The swift-heel'd horse to praise, and sing his rapid flight. Congreve, Ode to Ld. Godolphin.

SWIFTLY.† adv. [from swift; Saxon ſwiftlice.] Fleetly; rapidly; nimbly;

with celerity; with velocity.

These move swiftly, and at great distance; but then they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Pleas'd with the passage, we slide swiftly on,

And see the dangers which we cannot shun. Dryden.

In decent order they advance to light;

Yet then too swiftly fleet by human sight,

And meditate too soon their everlasting flight. Prior.

SWIFTFNESS.† n. s. [from swift; Sax ſwiftneſſe.] Speed; nimbleness; rapidity; quickness; velocity; celerity.

Let our proportions for these wars

Be soon collected, and all things thought upon,

That may with reasonable swiftness add

More feathers to our wings. Shaks. Hen. V.

We may outrun

By violent swiftness that which we run at;

And lose by over-running. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Speed to describe whose swiftness number fails. Milton, P. L.

Exulting, till he finds their nobler sense

Their disproportion'd speed does recompense;

Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent

Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent. Denham.

Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,

That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.

ings*. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Paintings, swoonings of despair. Milton, S. A.

TO SWOOP.† v. a. [I suppose formed from the sound. Dr. Johnson.— It is evidently the same as sweep, as Mr. H.
Tooke has observed.]

1. To seize by falling at once as a hawk upon his prey.

A fowl in Madagascar, called a huck, the feathers of whose wings are twelve paces, can with as much ease swoop up an elephant as our kites do a mouse. Wilkins.

This mouldering piecemeal in your hands did fall.

And now at last you came to swoop it all. Dryden.

2. To prey upon; to catch up.

The physician looks with another eye on the medicinal herb than the grazing ox, which swoops
it in with the common grass. Glanville, Scops.

TO SWOOP.† v. n. To pass with pomp.

Not used.

The nine-ston'd trophy thus whilst she doth entertain,

Proud Tamer swoops along with such a lusty train,
As fits so brave a flood. Drayton.

SWOOP. n. s. [from the verb.] Fall of a bird of prey upon his quarry.

All my pretty ones?

Did you say all? What all? O hell-kite! all!

What, all my pretty chickens and their dam,
At one fell swoop? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The eagle fell into the fox's quarters, and carried away a whole litter of cubs at a swoop.

L'Estrange.

of the parties, without any delay, any reckoning or counting, or other adjustment of proportion, something is swopt off at once by each of them. Mr. H.
Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 263.] To change; to exchange one thing for another. A low word.

When I drove a thrust home, he put it by,
And cried, as in derision, spare the striping;
Oh that insulting word! I would have swoop'd
Youth for old age, and all my life behind,
To have been then a momentary man.

Dryden, Cleom.

SWOP.* n. s. An exchange. See the verb.

These had made a foolish swop between a couple of thick bandy legs, and two long trapsicks.

Spect. No. 559.

SWORD. n. s. [rpeop, Sax. sweerd,
Dutch.]

1. A weapon used either in cutting or thrusting; the usual weapon of fights hand to hand.

Old unhappy traitor, the sword is out
That must destroy thee. Shaks. K. Lear.

Each man took his sword, and slew all the males. Genais.

But the sword

Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen
Nor solid might resist that edge; it met

The sword of Satan with steep force to smite
Descending, and in half cut sheer; nor stay'd,

But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd
All his right side: then Satan first knew pain,

And with'd him to and fro convolv'd; so sore
The griding sword with discontinuous wound

2. Destruction by war: as, fire and sword.

The sword without, and terror within.

Deut. xxxii. 25.

3. Vengeance of justice.

Justice to Merit does weak aid afford,
She quits the balance, and resigns the sword.

Dryden.

4. Emblem of authority.

This I, her sword-bearer, do carry,
For civil deed and military. Hudibras.

SWORDED. adj. [from sword.] Girt with a sword.

The sworded seraphim

Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd.

Milton, Ode.

SWORDER. n. s. [from sword.] A cut-throat; a soldier. In contempt.

A Roman sworder and banditto slave Murder'd sweet Tully. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Cesar will

Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to 'th' show
Against a sworder. Shakspeare.

SWORDFISH. n. s. [xiphias.] A fish with a long sharp bone issuing from his head.

A swordfish small him from the rest did sunder,
That in his throat him pricking softly under,

His wide abyss him forced forth to spew. Spenser.

Malpighi observed the middle of the optick nerve of the swordfish to be a large membrane, folded, according to its length, in many doubles, like a fan. Derham, Phys. Theol.

Our little fleet was now engag'd so far,
That, like the swordfish in the whale, they fought;

The combat only seem'd a civil war,
Till through their bowels we our passage wrought.

Dryden.

SWORDBRASS. n. s. [gladiolus.] A kind of sedge; gladder. Ainsworth.

SWORDEKNOT. n. s. [sword and knot.]
Riband-tied to the hilt of the sword.

Wigs with wigs, swordknots with swordknots strive,

Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive. Pope.

SWORDLAW. n. s. Violence; the law by which all is yielded to the stronger.

So violence

Proceeded, and oppression, and swordlaw,
Through all the plain, and refuge none was found.

Milton, P. L.

SWORDMAN. n. s. [sword and man.] Soldier; fighting man.

Worthy fellows, and like to prove most snewy swordmen. Shakspeare, All's Well.

At Lecca's house,

Among your swordmen, where so many associates
Both of thy mischief and thy madness met.

B. Jonson.

Essex was made lieutenant-general of the army,
the darling of the swordmen. Clarendon.

SWORDBLAYER. n. s. [sword and play.]
Gladiator; fencer; one who exhibits in publick his skill at the weapons by fighting prizes.

These they call swordblayers, and this spectacle a sword-fight. Hakevill on Providence.

SWORE.† The preterite of swear. [Saxon, rpon.]

How soon unsay

What feign'd submission swore. Milton, P. L.

SWORN. The participle passive of swear.

What does else want credit, come to me,
And I'll be sworn 't is true. Shakspeare.

I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim necessity; and he and I

Will keep a league till death. Shaks. Rich. II.

They that are mad against me, are sworn against me. Psalms.

He refused not the civil offer of a pharisee, though his sworn enemy; and would eat at the table of those who sought his ruin. Calamy, Serm.

To shelter innocence,

The nation all elects some patron-knight,
Sworn to be true to love, and slave to fame,
And many a valiant chief enrolls his name.

Granville.

TO SWOUND.* v. n. To swoon. Formerly swoon was so written; and it is still sometimes vulgarly so spoken.

All in gore blood; I swounded at the sight.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

SWUM. Preterite and participle passive of swim.

Air, water, earth,

By fowl, fish, beast, was flown, was swum, was walk'd

Frequent. Milton, P. L.

SWUNG. Preterite and participle passive of swing.

Her hand within her hair she wound,
Swung her to earth, and dragg'd her on the ground.

Addison.

SYB.† adj. Properly sib, which see.

SYBARITICAL.*† adj. [from the Sybaritæ, SYBARITICK. f Latin, inhabitants of Sybaris, so given to voluptuousness, that their luxury became proverbial.] Luxurious; wanton.

He should have hoped to match him in their sybaritical cloysters, where they abound with meat, and drink, and ease.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Cl. p. 55.

Dine with me on a single dish, to atone to philosophy for the sybaritic dinners of Prior-Park.

Warburton, Lett. to Hurd, L. 125.

SYCAMINE.† n. s. [σικαμινος, Gr. picomop,
SYCAMORE. f Saxon. The sycamore of Scripture is not the same with ours.

Wicliffe calls it the more-tree. So ευνδ- μῦρον, proprie album morum. Critop. Emend. in Meursii Gloss. p. 85.] A tree.

Sycamore is our acer majus; one of the kinds of maples: it is a quick grower. Mortimer.

If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up, and it should obey you. St. Luke, xvii. 6.

I was no prophet, but an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos, vii. 14.

Go to yonder sycamore-tree, and hide your bottle of drink under its hollow root. Walton, Angler.

Sycamores with aglantine were spread; A hedge about the sides, a covering over head. Dryden.

SY'COPHANCY.* n. s. [from sycophant.]

1. The practice of an informer.

One that best knew it [the condition of the collectors or farmers of taxes] branded it with polling and sycophancy.

Bp. Hall, Contempt. Matthew called.

2. The practice of a flatterer.

The sycophancy of A. Philips had prejudiced Mr. Addison against Pope.

Warburton, Note on Pope's 4th Pastoral.

SY'COPHANT. † n. s. [sycophanta, Lat. συκοφάντης, Gr. from σῦκος, a fig, and φάνω, to shew, to denounce. To export figs from Athens was forbidden by law; and they, who informed against persons disregarding this law, were called sycophants.] A talebearer; a makebate; a malicious parasite.

Accusing sycophants, of all men, did best sort to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants because of no evil they said, they could bring any new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more secure, while the fear he had figured in his mind had any possibility of event. Sidney.

Men know themselves void of those qualities which the impudent sycphant, at the same time, both ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. South.

To SY'COPHANT. v. n. [συκοφάντω; from the noun.] To play the sycophant. A low bad word.

His sycophanting arts being detected, that game is not to be played the second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again. Gov. of the Tongue.

To SY'COPHANT.* v. a. To calumniate. Not in use.

He makes it his first business to tamper with his reader by sycophanting and misnaming the work of his adversary.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymm.

SYCOPHANTICAL.* adj. [from sycophant.] Meanly officious; basely parasitical.

Henry the Eighth of England [was] led by the advice of some of his sycophantical popish prelates.

Sir Simonds D'Ewes, Pr. Pract. (1645,) p. 62. They — suffered themselves to be cheated and ruined by a sycophantical parasite.

SY'COPHANTICK. † adj. [from sycophant.]

1. Talebearing; mischievously officious.

2. Fawning.

'Tis well known, that in these times the illiberal sycophantick manner of devotion was by the wiser sort contemned. Ld. Shaftesbury.

To SY'COPHANTISE. v. n. [from sycophant.] To play the talebearer.

SY'COPHANTRY.* n. s. [from sycophant.] A malignant tale-bearing.

It is fit that the accused should be acquainted with this, that competent time and means may be allowed for his defence, that his plea should receive, if not a favourable, yet a free audience; the contrary practice is indeed rather backbiting, whispering, supplanting, or sycophanting than fair and lawful judging. Barrow, vol. i. S. 20.

SYLLA'BICAL. † adj. [from syllable.] Relating to syllables; consisting of syllables.

The Christians have marked every the least various lection, even syllabical.

Leslie, Truth of Christianity Demonstr.

SYLLA'BICALLY. † adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.

These and many like places, well considered, (upon which no brand of lie or falsity may be fixed,) though they do not literally and syllabically agree with the quotation, (but are verified either in a partial or concurrent sense,) may sufficiently justify that place in the first front of the Liturgy to be no lie, but a divine scriptural truth.

Bp. Gauden, Consider. on the Lit. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 25.

SYLLA'BICK. † adj. [syllabique, Fr. from syllable.] Relating to syllables.

In the responses also, which are noted for various voices, this syllabic distinction is sufficiently attended to. Mason on Ch. Music, p. 95.

SYLLABLE. n. s. [σύλλαβή; syllabe, Fr.]

1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.

I heard

Each syllable that breath made up between them. Shakespeare.

There is that property in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

2. Any thing proverbially concise.

Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded? Hooker.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, Creeps in this petty pace from day to day, To the last syllable of recorded time; And all our yesterdays have lighted fools The way to dusty death. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He hath told so many melancholy stories without one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears. Swift.

To SY'LLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter; to pronounce; to articulate.

Not in use.

Airy tongues that syllable men's names On sands, and shores, and desert wildernesses. Milton, Comus.

SY'LLABUB. n. s. [Rightly sillabub, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllabubs made at the milking pail, But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale. Beaumont.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages; 'tis nothing but whipt syllabub and froth, without solidity. Felton.

SY'LLABUS. n. s. [σύλλαβος.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SYLLOGISM. n. s. [σύλλογισμός; sylogisme, Fr.] An argument composed of three propositions: as, every man thinks; Peter is a man; therefore Peter thinks.

A piece of rhetoric is a sufficient argument of logic, an apologue of Æsop beyond a syllogism in Barbara. Brown.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the flint and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms! Bentley.

SYLLOGISTICAL. † adj. [σύλλογιστικός; from SYLLOGISTICK.] † sylogism.] Relating to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions, and syllogistical connexions in their reasoning, there is no such matter: but the entire business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complex does not belong to the syllogistical form of it. Watts, Logic.

SYLLOGISTICALLY. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of syllogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogistically; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it. Locke.

SYLLOGIZATION.* n. s. [from syllogize.] The act of reasoning by syllogism.

From mathematical bodies, and the truths resulting from them, they passed to the contemplation of truth in general; to the soul, and its powers both of intuition and syllogization. Harris, Three Treat. Notes, p. 265.

To SY'LOGIZE. v. n. [syllogiser, Fr. σύλλογιζω.] To reason by syllogism.

Logic is, in effect, an art of syllogizing. Baker.

Men have endeavoured to transform logic into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Watts.

SYLLOGIZER.* n. s. [from syllogize.] One who reasons by syllogism.

Every syllogizer is not presently a match to cope with Bellarmine, Baronius, Stapleton.

Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 159.

SYLPH.* n. s. [sylyph, sylyphide, French; SY'LPHID.] "nom que les cabalistes donnent aux prétendus génies élémentaires de l'air. Ce mot peut venir du Gr. σίλφω, (silphé), nom d'une espèce d'insecte qui ne vieillit jamais." Morin.]

A fabled being of the air.

I should as soon expect to meet a nymph or a sylyph for a wife or a mistress. Temple, Ess.

The light coquettes in sylyphs aloft repair, And sport and flutter in the fields of air.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

Ye sylyphs and sylyphids, to your chief give ear, Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons, hear. Ibid.

SYLVAN. adj. [Better silvan.] Woody; shady; relating to woods.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm, A silvan scene! and as the ranks ascend, Shade above shade, a woody theatre Of stateliest view. Milton, P. L.

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace, Watch'd by the silvan genius of the place. Pope.

SYLVAN. n. s. [silvan, Fr.] A wood-god, or satyr; perhaps sometimes a rustic.

Her private orchards wall'd on ev'ry side, To lawless silvans all access deny'd. Pope.

SYMBOL.* n. s. [symbole, Fr. σύμβολον; symbolum, Latin.]

1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form.

Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith. Baker.

2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.

Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship; which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves.

South, Serm.
The heathens made choice of these lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sub-lunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning.

Addison on Medals.

3. A sign or badge to know one by; a memorial.

That as a sacred symbol it may dwell
In her some's flesh to mind revengement.

Spenser, F. Q.

This reckoning I will pay Without conferring symbols. B. Jonson, Epigr.

4. Lot; sentence of adjudication.

The persons who are to be judged; even you and I and all the world; kings and priests, nobles and learned, the crafty and the easy, the wise and the foolish, the rich and the poor, the prevailing tyrant and the oppressed party, shall all appear to receive their symbol.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. (ed. 1665,) p. 3.

SYMBOLICAL. adj. [symbolique, French; συμβολικός, from symbolō.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs; comprehending something more than itself.

By this inroad idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself.

Brown.
The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed.

Bp. Taylor.

SYMBOLICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was hieroglyphical, in the inward sense implying an abstinence from certain vices, symbolically intimated from the nature of those animals.

Brown.
It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature and a sensible sermon.

Bp. Taylor.

SYMBOLIZATION. n. s. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of Scripture, excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes racked beyond their symbolizations.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To SYMBOLIZE. v. n. [symboliser, French; from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation.

Bacon.

Aristotle and the schools have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another.

Boyle.

They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses.

Howell.

I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the libertines, to circumvent libertinism.

More.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it mightily desires.

South, Serm.

To SYMBOLIZE. v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

SYMMETRICAL* adj. [from symmetry.] Commensurable.

Phillips.

It was both the doctrine of the apostles, and the practice of the church, while it was symmetrical, to obey the magistrate.

More, Myst. of Godl. (1660,) p. 204.

SYMMETRIAN. n. s. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow.

Sidney.

SYMMETRICAL† adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

I have known many a woman with an exact shape, and a symmetrical assemblage of beautiful features, please nobody.

Ld. Chesterfield.

SYMMETRIST. n. s. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true.

Wotton, Architecture.

To SYMMETRIZE* v. a. [from symmetry.] To make proportionate.

He would soon have supplied every deficiency, and symmetrized every disproportion.

Burke.

SYMMETRY. n. s. [symmetrie, French; συμ and μέτρον.] Adaptation of parts to each other; proportion; harmony; agreement of one part to another.

She by whose lines proportion should be Examined, measure of all symmetry;

Whom had that ancient seen, who thought souls made

Of harmony, he would at next have said
That harmony was she.

Donne.

And in the symmetry of her parts is found
A pow'r, like that of harmony in sound.

Waller.

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense.

More.

Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him.

Dryden.

SYMPATHETICAL. adj. [sympathetique, SYMPATHETICK.] Fr. from sympathy.] Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other; feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Herculeon are grounded the gross mistakes, in the cure of diseases, not only from sympathetick receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications.

Brown.

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond.

Roscommon.

To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathetick conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence.

Glauville, Specs.

To you our author makes her soft request,
Who speak the kindest, and who write the best:
Your sympathetick hearts she hopes to move,
From tender friendship and endearing love.

Prior.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetick and vital passions produced within ourselves.

Bentley.

SYMPATHETICALLY† adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

He seems to have caught sympathetically Sandys's sudden impulse to break forth into a devout song at the awful and inspiring spectacle.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Sm. Poems.

To SYMPATHIZE. v. n. [sympathiser, Fr. from sympathy.]

1. To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming on.

Shakspeare.

The thing of courage,
As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize.

Shakspeare.

Nature, in awe to him,
Hath doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great master so to sympathize.

Milton, Ode.

The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes, and is concerned for them.

Locke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures.

Addison, Spect.

Though the greatness of their mind exempts them from fear, yet none condole and sympathize more heartily.

Collier.

2. To agree; to fit. Not proper.

Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

SYMPATHY. n. s. [sympathie, Fr. συμπάθεια.] Fellow-feeling; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

You are not young; no more am I: go to, then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy?

Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

But what it is,

The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep,
If but for sympathy.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

I started back;
It started back; but pleas'd I soon return'd;
Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks
Of sympathy and love.

Milton, P. L.

They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
Of ugly serpents: horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy.

Milton, P. L.

Or sympathy, or some connatural force,
Powerful at greatest distance to unite,
With secret amity, things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance.

Milton, P. L.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate: it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals.

South, Serm.

Can kindness to desert like yours be strange?
Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd;

For noble souls in nature are ally'd.

Dryden.

There are such associations made in the minds of most men, and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them.

Locke.

SYMPHONIOUS. adj. [from symphony.] Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode,

Follow'd with acclamation and the sound

Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd

Angelick harmonies.

Milton, P. L.

To SYMPHONIZE* v. n. [from symphony.] To agree with; to be in unison with.

I mean the Law and the Prophets symphonizing with the Gospel.

Boyle, Style of Holy Script. p. 253.

SYMPHONY.† n. s. [symphonie, Fr. σὺν and φωνή, Gr.] The word was formerly in use for a kind of musical instrument. "Symphonia non significat hic concentum, sed instrumentum musicum, confectum, ed conjunctis fistulis, &c." Poli Synops. Crit. in Dan. iii. 5. where other accounts are given of it. Our translation of dulcimer is in the margin explained by Chald. symphony. See Daniel, iii. 5.] Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

His eldres son was in the field, and whanne he came, and neighe to the hous, he herde a symfonye and a croude. Wicliffe, St. Luke, xv.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the comeliest proportion between breadths and heights, reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wotton.

Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light, Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs And choral symphonies, day without night, Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton, P. L.

The trumpets sound,
And warlike symphony is heard around;
The marching troops through Athens take their way;

The great earl-marshal orders their array. Dryden.

SYMPHYSIS. n. s. [σύν and φύσις.] Symphysis, in its original signification, denotes a connascency, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone. Wiseman.

SYMPOSIACK. adj. [Symposiack, French; συμπόσιακος, Gr.] Relating to merry makings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and comotation, from the ancient custom of symposiack meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads.

In some of those symposiack disruptions amongst my acquaintance, I affirmed that the dietetick part of medicine depended upon scientific principles. Arbutnot.

SYMPOSIUM.* n. s. [Latin.] A feast; a merry making; a drinking together.

It appears that the company dined so very late, (in 1609,) as at half an hour after eleven in the morning; and that it was the fashion to ride to this polite symposium on a Spanish jennet, a servant running before with his master's cloak.

SYMPTOM.† n. s. [symptome, French; σμεπτομα, Greek.] This word is found amongst those requiring explanation, in Bagwell's Mystery of Astronomy, published in 1655.]

1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or constant effect.

The symptoms, as Dr. Sydenham remarks, which are commonly scorbutick, are often nothing but the principles or seeds of a growing, but unripe gout. Blackmore.

2. A sign; a token.
Ten glorious campaigns are passed, and now,
Like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms. Swift.

SYMPTOMATICAL.* adj. [symptomatique, French.]
SYMPTOMATICK. } Fr. from symptom.
Happening concurrently, or occasionally.

Symptomatical is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in diseases; as a fever from pain is said to be symptomatical, because it arises from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain; for when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that.

Quincy.
By fomentation and a cataplasm the swelling was discussed; and the fever, then appearing but symptomatical, lessened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wiseman, Surgery.

SYMPTOMATICALY. adv. [from symptomatical.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a humo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes symptomatically. Wiseman.

SYNAGOGICAL. adj. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SYNAGOGUE. n. s. [synagogue, French; συναγωγή, Gr.] An assembly of the Jews to worship.

Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue. Shakspeare.

As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day. St. Luke, iv. 16.

SYNALEPHA. n. s. [συναλοιφή, Gr.] A contraction or excision of a syllable in a Latin verse, by joining together two vowels in the scanning or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego.

Virgil, though smooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uses synalephas, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

SYNARCHY.* n. s. [συναρχία, Gr.] Joint sovereignty.

The synarchies or joint reigns of father and son have rendered the chronology a little difficult.

Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bible.
SYNARTHROSIS. n. s. [σύν and άρθρσις.] A close conjunction of two bones.

There is a conspicuous motion where the conjunction is called diarthrosis, as in the elbow; an obscure one, where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wiseman, Surgery.

SYNAXIS.* n. s. [σύναξις, Gr.] A meeting of persons; a congregation.

They celebrated their synaxes and communions in grots and retirements.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1651.) p. 260.

SYNCHONDROSIS. n. s. [σύν and χόνδρσις.] Synchondrosis is an union by gristles of the sternon to the ribs. Wiseman.

SYNCHRONAL.* adj. [σύν and χρόνος, Gr.] Happening at the same time; belonging to the same time.

That glorious estate of the church, which is synchironal to the second and third thunder.

More on the Sev. Churches, p. 141.
The things, that are found to be synchironal, have also a natural connexion and complication one with another. More, Myst. of Godd. p. 182.

SYNCHRONAL.* n. s. That which happens at the same time, or belongs to the same time, with another thing.

The near cognation and colligation of those seven synchironals that are contemporary to the six first trumpets. More, Myst. of Godd. p. 182.

SYNCHRONICAL. adj. [σύν and χρόνος.] Happening together at the same time.

It is difficult to make out how the air is conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being far from synchironal. Boyle.

SYNCHRONISM. n. s. [σύν and χρόνος.] Concurrence of events happening at the same time.

The coherence and synchironism of all the parts of the Mosaic chronology, after the Flood, bear a most regular testimony to the truth of his history. Hale.

To SYNCHRONIZE. v. n. [from synchironism.] To concur at the same time; to agree in regard to the same time.

The most genuine sense to me, is to synchironize with the history of that time wherein John lived.

Dr. Robinson, Endoraz, (1658.) p. 104.

All these synchironize with the six first trumpets. More, Myst. of Godd. (1660.) p. 191.

SYNCHRONOUS. adj. [σύν and χρόνος.] Happening at the same time.

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the solids and fluids in an oscillatory motion, synchironous and proportional to their changes.

Arbutnot on Air.
SYNCHYSIS.* n. s. [σύν and χύσις.] A confusion; a confused arrangement of words in a sentence.

The English translator hath expressed the sense, but not translated strictly to the words, by reason of the synchysis and involved and perplexed traction being not well distinguished.

Knatchbull, Annot. N. Test. p. 133.
To SYNCOPE. v. a. [from syncope.]

1. To contract; to abbreviate, by taking from the middle of a word.

The tyrant time, which hath swallowed many names, hath also in use of speech changed more by contracting, syncope, curtailing, and mollifying. Camden, Rem. in Surnames.

2. [In music.] To divide a note. See SYNCOPE.

SYNCOPE.† n. s. [syncope, Fr. συνκοπή, Gr.]

1. Fainting fit.

The symptoms attending gunshot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and syncope. Wiseman.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off a part in the middle.

3. The division of a note, used when two or more notes of one part answer to a single one of the other. Mus. Dict.

SYNCOPIST. n. s. [from syncope.] Contractor of words.

To outshine all the modern syncopists, and thoroughly content my English readers, I intend to publish a Spectator that shall not have a single vowel in it. Spectator.

To SYNCOPEIZE. v. a. [from syncope.] To contract; to abridge.

Whether to ascribe this to some modish affectation of times and humours, or more particularly to a poetical humour of *syncope*izing and contracting their words.

Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tut. (1680.) p. 114.

To SYNDICATE.† v. a. [syndiquer, French; σύν and δικη, Gr.] To judge; to pass judgement on; to censure. An unusual word, as Dr. Johnson observes, citing the passage from Hakewill: to whom, however, it is not peculiar. It is now perhaps obsolete.

Some men must be intimidated and syndicated with commissions, before they will deliver the fruits of justice. Donne, Devot. p. 475.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his master, and all law-makers before him.

Hakewill on Providence.
SYNDICK.* n. s. [syndic, Fr. σύν and δικη.] A kind of chief magistrate; a curator.

May it please you, that Dr. Gunning and Dr. Pearson may be your legal synodics for you, and in your name, to treat and conclude with the said archbishop concerning his and your right and interest in the said books.

Grace in the Senate, Univ. Cambr. July 22, 1662.
They have two or three Greek synodics on the part of the people, to take care that the ancient laws of the island are observed.

Pococke, Observ. on Greece.

SYNDROME. n. s. [συνδρομή, Gr.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owns a dependence on such a syndrome of pre-required motors.

SYNECDOCHE. n. s. [συνεδοχή, Fr. συνεδοχή, Gr.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hand of God, and by these his holy Spirit changes our hearts: therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synecdoche; that is, they do in this manner the work for which God ordained them.

Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.
SYNECDOCHICAL. adj. [from synecdoche.] Expressed by a synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hospitals, and shew you there how many souls, narrowly lodged in synecdochical bodies, see their earthen cottages moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal?

Boyle, Seraph. Love.
SYNECDOCHICALLY.* adv. [from synecdochical.] According to a synecdochical way of speaking.

Thus did our Saviour rise from the dead on the third day properly; and was three days and three nights in the earth synecdochically.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.
SYNERGISTICK.* adj. [from συνεργιστικός, Gr.] Co-operating.

Luther's notions of the irresistible decrees, which he afterwards published in his book De servo arbitrio, shocked both parties, and caused a kind of revolution on all sides. The papists raised an outcry against their own doctrine, when expressed in so ungarded a manner: and the Sixian divines, with Melancthon at their head, silently withdrew themselves from their master Luther in this point; and struck out, or rather adopted, another system, viz. the synergistical. On this system of the co-operation of grace and free-will, the Augustan Confession is wholly built.

Dean Tucker, Apol. for the Ch. of Eng. (1772), p. 60.
SYNNEUROISIS. n. s. [συνευροισις, Gr.]

Synneurosis is when the connexion is made by a ligament. Of this in symplysis we find instances, in the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulation, it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibiae.

Wiseman, Surgery.
SYNDON. † n. s. [σύνδοξ, Saxon; synode, French; σύνδοξ, Gr.]

1. An assembly called for consultation: it is used particularly of ecclesiasticks. A provincial synod is commonly used, and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

VOL. III.

Since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synod been decreed,
To admit no traffick to our adverse towns.

Shakespeare.
The opinion was not only condemned by the synod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme madness.

Bacon.
Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of presbytry, where laymen guide
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.

Cleveland.
His royal majesty, according to these Presbyterian rules, shall have no power to command his clergy to keep a national synod.

White.
Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate,
Synod of gods! and, like to what ye are,
Great things resolv'd.

Milton, P. L.
Let us call to synod all the blest,
Through heaven's wide bounds.

Milton, P. L.
The second council of Nice, he saith, I most irreverently call that wise synod; upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I should dare to reflect so much dishonour on a council.

Stillingfleet.
Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove!
And you bright synod of the powers above,
On this my son your gracious gifts bestow.

Dryden.
2. Conjunction of the heavenly bodies.

Howe'er love's native hours are set,
Whatever starry synod met,
'Tis in the mercy of her eye,
If poor love shall live or die.

Crashaw.
Their planetary motions and aspects
Of noxious efficacy, and when to join
In synod unbending.

Milton, P. L.
As the planets and stars have, according to astrologers, in their great synods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are ascribed to one or two of them out of that aspect; so divers particulars, which, whilst they lay scattered among the writings of several authors were incon-siderable, when they come to be laid together, may oftentimes prove highly useful to physiology in their conjunctions.

Boyle.
SYNDOTAL. † n. s. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.

Synodals were [anciently] the publication or recital of the provincial constitutions in the parish churches. Wheatly on the Comm. Pr. ch. iii. § 10.

The synodals to the bishop at Easter, is two shillings. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 8.

SYNDOTAL. † adj. [synodique, synodal, French; from synod.]

1. Relating to a synod; transacted in a synod.

The various dignity of their several churches, and of their many functions, rules, and orders in them, by reason of the frequency of their synodical and processional meetings, have necessarily raised many questions of place among them.

Selden.
St. Athanasius writes a synodical epistle to those of Antioch, to compose the differences among them upon the ordination of Paulinus.

Stillingfleet.
The authority of some synodical canons.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.
2. [Synodique, French.] Reckoned from one conjunction with the sun to another.

The diurnal and annual revolutions of the sun, to us are the measures of day and year; and the synodical revolution of the moon measures the month.

Holder.
The moon makes its synodical motion about the earth in twenty-nine days twelve hours and about forty-four minutes.

Locke, Elem. of Nat. Philosophy.

SYNO'DICALLY. adv. [from synodical.] By the authority of a synod or public assembly.

It shall be needful for those churches synodically to determine something in those points. Sanderson.

The alterations made by the commissioners were brought to the convocation, then sitting, where they were synodically agreed upon. Nelson.

SYNONYMA. † n. s. [Latin; συνώνυμος.] Names which signify the same thing.

Every tinker for his chink may cry,
Rogue, bawd, and cheater, call you by the sur-names

And known synonyma of your profession.

B. Jonson, New Inn.
SYNONYMAL.* adj. [συνώνυμος.] Synonymous.

Repetitions here, and doubled sentences, and enlargements by synonymal words, &c. before the shutting up of the period, are but necessary.

Instruct. for Orat. (1682), p. 95.

SYNONYMALLY.* adv. [from synonymal.] Synonymously.

The fifth canon uses synonymally. Spelman.

SYNONYME.* n. s. [synonyme, Fr. from the Gr. σύν, with, and ὄνομα, name. Eol. ὄνυμα.] A word of the same meaning as some other word.

Mason.
Most synonyms have some minute distinction.

Reid.
To SYNO'NYMISE. v. a. [from synonyma.] To express the same thing in different words.

This word fortis we may synonymize after all these fashions, stout, hardy, valiant, doughty, courageous, adventurous, brave, bold, daring, intrepid.

Camden, Rem.
SYNONYMOUS. † adj. [synonyme, French; συνώνυμος.] Expressing the same thing by different words; having the same signification; univocal.

When two or more words signify the same thing, as wave and billow, mead and meadow, they are usually called synonymous words.

Watts, Logick.
These words consist of two propositions, which are not distinct in sense, but one and the same thing variously expressed; for wisdom and understanding are synonymous words here.

Tillotson.
Fortune is but a synonymous word for nature and necessity.

Bentley, Serm.
SYNONYMOUSLY.* adv. [from synonymous.] In a synonymous manner.

It is often used synonymously with words which signify any kind of production or formation.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.
SYNO'NYMY. † n. s. [συνωνυμία.] The quality of expressing by different words the same thing.

We having three rivers of note, synonymies with her.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 2.
SYNO'PSIS. † n. s. [σύνopsis.] A general view; all the parts brought under one view.

Breviaries, synopses, and other loitering gear.

Milton, Areopagitica.
SYNOPTICAL. adj. [from synopsis.] Affording a view of many parts at once.

We have collected so many synoptical tables, calculated for his monthly use. Evelyn, Kalendar.

SYNOPTICALLY.* adv. [from synoptical.] In a synoptical manner.

I shall more synoptically here insert a catalogue of all dying materials.

Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 295.

SYNTACTICAL.† adj. [from syntaxis, Lat.]
1. Conjoined; fitted to each other.

2. Relating to the construction of speech.
A figure is divided into tropes, &c. grammatical, orthographical, syntactical.
Peacham, Garden of Elo. (1577), sign. B. i.

SYNTAX.† } n. s. [σύνταξις.]
SYNTAXIS. }

1. A system; and a number of things joined together.

They owe no other dependence to the first than what is common to the whole syntax of beings.

Glanville.

2. That part of grammar which teaches the construction of words.

Words—have no power, save with dull grammarians,

Whose souls are nought but a syntaxis of them.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

To make the word gift, like the river Mole in Surrey, to run under the bottom of a long line, and so start up to govern the word presbytery, as in immediate syntaxis.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Def. § 5.

I can produce a hundred instances to convince any reasonable man, that they do not so much as understand common grammar and syntax. Swift.

SYNTERE'SIS.* n. s. [σύν and τρεω, Gr.]
A remorse of conscience.

Though the principles of synteresis, the seeds of piety and virtue, scattered and disseminated in the soul, to bring forth the fruit of virtue and felicity, may be trampled on and kept under, cropped and snubbed, by the bestial part; yet they will sometimes be starting out, sprouting, and putting forth themselves.

Bp. Ward, Sermon. 30th Jan. (1674), p. 13.

SYNTHESIS. n. s. [σύνθεσις.] The act of joining: opposed to analysis.

The synthesis consists in assuming the causes discovered and established as principles, and by them explaining the phenomena proceeding from them, and proving the explanations. Newton, Opt.

SYNTHE'TICAL.† } adj. [συνθετικός, Gr. syn- SYNTHE'TICK. } thetique, Fr.] Conjoining; compounding; forming composition; opposed to analytick.

Synthetic method is that which begins with the parts, and leads onward to the knowledge of the whole; it begins with the most simple principles and general truths, and proceeds by degrees to that which is drawn from them or compounded of them; and therefore it is called the method of composition.

Watts, Logick.

SYNTHE'TICALLY.* adv. [from synthetical.]
By synthesis.

The plan proceeds synthetically from parts to the whole.

Walker.

To SYPE.* See To SIPE.

The Scripture-Greek is observed to be full of syrisms and hebraisms.

Warburton, Doct. of Grace, i. 56.

SY'RINGA.* n. s. A flowering shrub.

The sweet syringa, yielding but in scent
To the rich orange.
Mason, Eng. Garden.

SY'RINGE. n. s. [σύνριγξ.] A pipe through which any liquor is squirted.

The heart seems not designed to be the fountain or conservatory of the vital flame, but as a machine to receive the blood from the veins, and force it out by the arteries through the whole body as a syringe doth any liquor, though not by the same artifice.
Ray.

To SY'RINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To spout by a syringe.

A flux of blood from the nose, mouth, and eye, was stopt by the syrring up of oxyrate.

Wiseman, Surgery.

SY'RTIS. n. s. [Latin.] A quicksand.
a bog.

A boggy syrtis,—neither sea, nor good dry land.
Milton, P. L.

SY'RUP.* See SIROP.

SY'STASIS.* n. s. [σύστασις, Gr.] The consistence of any thing; a constitution.

It is a worse preservative of a general constitution, than the syntasis of Crete, or the confederation of Poland, or any other ill-devised corrective which has yet been imagined in the necessities produced by an ill-constructed system of government.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

SYSTEM. n. s. [systeme, Fr. σύστημα.]

1. Any complexure or combination of many things acting together.

2. A scheme which reduces many things to regular dependence or co-operation.

3. A scheme which unites many things in order.

He presently bought a system of divinity, with design to apply himself straightway to that study.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

Aristotle brings morality into system, by treating of happiness under heads, and ranges it in classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before.

Baker.

The best way to learn any science is to begin with a regular system, or a short and plain scheme of that science well drawn up into a narrow compass.

Watts.

SYSTEMA'TICAL. adj. [systematique, Fr. συστηματικός; from system.] Methodical; written or formed with regular subordination of one part to another.

It will be necessary, in a discourse about the formation of the world, to give you a brief account of some of the most principal and systematical phenomena that occur in it.

Bentley.

Now we deal much in essays, and unreasonably despise systematical learning; whereas our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems.

Watts.

SYSTEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from systematical.] In form of a system.

I treat of the usefulness of writing books of essay, in comparison of that of writing systematically.

Boyle.

Aristotle brings morality into system, and ranges it into classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before.

Baker.

SY'STEMATIST.* n. s. [from systematize.]

SY'STEMATIZER. } One who reduces things to any kind of system.

Systematists in botany—arrange plants into certain orders, classes, or genera.

Diseases were healed, and buildings erected, before medicine and architecture were systematized into arts.

Harris, Philolog. Inq.

Systematized regicide.

Burke, Lett. on a Regicide Ponce.

SY'STEM-MAKER.* n. s. [system and maker.] One who forms systems.

Mason.

We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain.

Prior, Alma.

SY'STEM-MONGER.* n. s. [system and monger.] One fond of framing systems.

Mason.

A system-monger, who, without knowing any thing of the world by experience, has formed a system of it in his dusty cell, lays it down, that flattery is pleasing.

Ld. Chesterfield.

SY'STOLE. n. s. [systole, Fr. συστολή.]
1. [In anatomy.] The contraction of the heart.

The systole resembles the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural size.

Ray.

2. [Systole, French.] In grammar, the shortening of a long syllable.

SY'STYLE.* n. s. [style, French, from στυλ and στυλος, Gr.] A building in which the pillars are near together.

SY'ZYGY.* n. s. [syzygie, French; σύζυγια, Gr. conjunctio.] A conjunction of any two of the heavenly bodies.

T.

T A B

T, A mute consonant, which, at the beginning and end of words, has always the same sound, nearly approaching to that of d; but before an i, when followed by a vowel, has the sound of an obscure s: as, nation, salvation, except when s precedes t: as Christian, question.

TABARD.† n. s. [tabarre, French; tabar, Welsh; tabardum, low Latin.] A short gown; a herald's coat: sometimes written, incorrectly, taberd.

The tabard [was] a jacket or sleeveless coat, worn in times past by noblemen in the warres, but now only by heraults.

Spaght, Gloss. Chauc. (1597.)

Their apparel is said to shine beyond the power of description, and their tabards to be studded with diamonds and rubies. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 354.

TABARDER.† n. s. [from tabard.] One who wears a tabard, or short gown: the name is still preserved in certain bachelors of arts on the old foundation of Queen's College in Oxford.

Celestial tabernacles, where they slept

Fann'd with cool winds.

Milton, P. L.

2. A sacred place; a place of worship.

The greatest conqueror did not only compose his divine odes, but set them to music: his works, though consecrated to the tabernacle, became the national entertainment, as well as the devotion of his people.

Addison.

To TABERNACLE.† v. n. [from the noun.] To enshrine; to house. Wesley has used tabernacled for dwelt, St. John, i. 14. But the author of the Christian Life had applied it before him. A Latin translation of the 14th century also uses tabernaculavit in the sacred passage mentioned.

He assumed our nature, and tabernacled among us in the flesh. Scott, Works, (ed. 1718,) ii. 467.

TABERNA'CLAR.* adj. [from tabernacle.] Latticed.

The sides of every street were covered with cloisters, crowned with rich and lofty pinnacles, and fronted with tabernacular or open work.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 93.

TABID. adj. [tabide, Fr. tabidus, Lat.] Wasted by disease; consumptive.

The tabid disposition, or the ulcer or ulcers of the lungs, which are the foundation of this disease, is very different from a diminution of the body, and decay of strength from a mere relaxation.

Blackmore.

In tabid persons milk is the best restorative, being chyle already prepared.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

TABIDNESS.† n. s. [from tabid.] Consumptiveness; state of being wasted by disease.

Profuse sweatings in the night, a tabidness of the flesh, hot and cold fits alternately succeeding.

Leigh's Nat. Hist. Lancashire, &c. (1700,) p. 62.

TABITUDE.* n. s. [tabitudo, Lat.] A consumption; a wasting away by disease.

Cockeram.

TABLATURE.† n. s. [from table.]

1. A way of expressing musical sounds by letters or cyphers; a piece of music for the lute. This is the old sense of the word, but is overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

No such plain-songs are set out in the books of divine tablature.

Proceed. against Garnet, (1606,) i. i. b.

What means this stately tablature,

The balance of thy strains?

Which seems, instead of sifting pure,

To extend and rack thy veins:

Thy odes first their own harmony did break,

For singing troth is but in tune to speak.

Loveless, Luc. P. p. 70.

2. [In anatomy.] A division or parting of the skull into two tables. Chambers.

3. [In painting.] By the word tablature we denote (according to the original word tabula) a work not only different from a mere portraiture, but from all those wilder sorts of painting, which are in a manner absolute and independent: such as painting in fresco upon the walls, the ceilings, the stair-cases, the cupolas, and other remarkable places either of churches or palaces.—It is not merely the dimension of a cloth or board, which denominates a piece or tablature.—'Tis then, that in painting we may give to any particular work the name of tablature, when the work is in reality a single piece, comprehended in one view, and formed according to one single intelligence, meaning, or design.

Ld. Shaftesbury, Introd. Judg. of Hercules.

TABLE.† n. s. [table, Fr. tabula, Lat.]

1. Any flat or level surface.

Upon the castle hill there is a bagnio paved with fair tables of marble.

Sandys.

2. A horizontal surface raised above the ground, used for meals and other purposes.

We may again

Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights.

Shakspeare.

Help to search my house; if I find not what I seek, let me for ever be your table sport.

Shaks.

Children at a table never asked for any thing, but contentedly took what was given them.

Locke on Education.

This shuts them out from all table conversation, and the most agreeable intercourses.

Addison, Spect.

If there is nothing else to discourage us, we may safely come to the Lord's table, and expect to be kindly entertained by him when we do.

Kettlewell.

Nor hath the fruit in it any core or kernel; and differing from other apples, yet is a good table fruit.

Mortimer.

The nymph the table spread, Ambrosial cates, and nectar, rosy red.

Pope.

3. The persons sitting at table, or partaking of entertainment.

Give me some wine, fill full,

I drink to th' general joy of the whole table.

Shakspeare.

4. The fare or entertainment itself: as, he keeps a good table.

When a man keeps a constant table, he may be allowed sometimes to serve up a cold dish of meat.

Tutler, No. 258.

5. A tablet; a surface on which any thing is written or engraved.

He was the writer of them in the tables of their hearts.

Hooker.

'Twas pretty, though a plague, To see him every hour; to sit and draw His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls, In our heart's table.

Shakspeare.

All these true notes of immortality In our heart's table we shall written find.

Davies.

I prepar'd to pay in verses rude A most detested act of gratitude: Ev'n this had been your elegy which now Is offer'd for your health, the table of my vow.

Dryden.

There are books extant which the atheist must allow of as proper evidence; even the mighty volumes of visible nature, and the everlasting tables of right reason; wherein if they do not wilfully shut their eyes, they may read their own folly written by the finger of God in a much plainer and more terrible sentence, than Belshazzar's was by the hand upon the wall.

Bentley, Serm.

Among the Romans, the judge or praetor granted administration, not only according to the tables of the testament, but even contrary to those tables.

Ayliffe, Farergon.

By the twelve tables, only those were called into succession of their parents that were in the parent's power.

Ayliffe.

6. [Tableau, Fr.] A picture or any thing that exhibits a view of any thing upon a flat surface.

I never lov'd myself,
Till now, infixed, I beheld myself
Drawn in the flatt'ring table of her eye. Shaks.
His Jalyus or Bacchus he so esteemed, that he had rather lose all his father's images than that table. Peacham.

Saint Anthony has a table that hangs up to him from a poor peasant, who fancied the saint had saved his neck. Addison.

7. An index; a collection of heads; a catalogue; a syllabus.

It might seem impertinent to have added a table to a book of so small a volume, and which seems to be itself but a table: but it may prove advantageous at once to learn the whole culture of any plant. Evelyn, Calendar.

Their learning reaches no farther than the tables of contents. Watts.

8. A synopsis; many particulars brought into one view.

I have no images of ancestors,
Wanting an ear, or nose; no forged tables
Of long descents, to boast false honours from.

B. Jonson.

9. The palm of the hand.

Mistress of a fairer table
Hath not history nor fable.

B. Jonson.

10. Draughts; small pieces of wood shifted on squares. [table, old French; which Roquefort explains by "jeu de trictrac et des échecs." So also the Saxon trælan, tesseris sive alæ ludere. See also Cotgrave in V. TABLE, which he renders "a chess-board, or that whereon we play at tables."] Monsieur le nice,
When he plays at tables, chides the dice. Shaks.

We are in the world like men playing at tables;
the chance is not in our power, but to play it, is;
and when it is fallen, we must manage it as we can.
By. Taylor.

11. To turn the TABLES. To change the condition or fortune of two contending parties: a metaphor taken from the vicissitude of fortune at gaming-tables.

They that are honest would be arrant knaves, if the tables were turned. L'Estrange.

If it be thus, the tables would be turned upon me; but I should only fail in my vain attempt.
Dryden.

- To TABLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To board; to live at the table of another.

He lost his kingdom, was driven from the society of men to table with the beasts, and to graze with oxen. South.

You will have no notion of delicacies if you table with them; they are all for rank and foul feeding. Fellon.

- To TABLE.† v. a.

1. To make into a catalogue; to set down.

I could have looked on him without admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items. Shakspeare, Cymb.

2. To represent as in painting.

I entreat you much to meditate sometimes upon the effect of superstition in this last powder-treason, fit to be tabled and pictured in the chambers of meditation as another hell above the ground.
Bacon, Suppl. to Cabaala, p. 68.

3. To supply with a table or food. This and the preceding sense are not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

When he himself tabled the Jews from heaven, that omer, which was every man's daily portion of manna, is computed to have been more than might have well sufficed the heartiest feeder thrice as many meals. Milton, Arcopagitica.

- TA'BLEBED. n. s. [from table and bed.] A bed of the figure of a table.

- TA'BLEBEER. n. s. [table and beer.] Beer used at actuals; small beer.

- TA'BLEBOOK. n. s. [table and book.] A book on which any thing is graved or written without ink.

What might you think,
If I had play'd the desk or table-book?

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Nature wipes clean the table-book first, and then portrays upon it what she pleases.

More against Atheism.

Put into your table-book whatsoever you judge worthy. Dryden.

Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
We scrawl all o'er with old and empty rules,
Stale memorandums of the schools. Swift, Miscel.

- TA'BLECLOTH. n. s. [table and cloth.] Linen spread on a table.

I will end with Odo holding master doctor's mule, and Anne with her tablecloth.

Camden, Rem.

- TA'BLEMAN. n. s. A man at draughts.

In clericals the keys are lined, and in colleges they use to line the tablemen. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

- TA'BLER. n. s. [from table.] One who boards. Ainsworth.

- TA'BLETALK. n. s. [table and talk.] Conversation at meals or entertainments; table discourse.

Let me praise you while I have a stomach.

— No, let it serve for tabletalk.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

His fate makes tabletalk, divulg'd with scorn,
And he a jest into his grave is born. Dryden, Juv.
He improves by the tabletalk, and repeats in the kitchen what he learns in the parlour. Guardian.

No fair adversary would urge loose tabletalk in controversy, and build serious inferences upon what was spoken but in jest. Atterbury.

- TA'BLET. n. s. [from table.]

1. A small level surface.

2. A medicine in a square form.

It hath been anciently in use to wear tablets of arsenic, or preservatives, against the plague; as they draw the venom to them from the spirits. Bacon.

3. A surface written on or painted.

It was by the authority of Alexander, that through all Greece the young gentlemen learned, before all other things, to design upon tablets of boxen wood. Dryden.

The pillar'd marble, and the tablet brass,
Mould'ring drop the victor's praise. Prior.

- TA'BOUR.† n. s. [tabourin, tabour, old French. "Tabourin de Basque, a kind of small and shallow drum or tabor, open at the one end, and having the barrel stuck full of small bells, and other glingling knacks of latten."] Cotgrave.] A small drum; a drum beaten with one stick to accompany a pipe.

If you did but hear the pedlar at door, you would never dance again after a tabour and pipe.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabour,
More than I know the sound of Marcus' tongue
From every meaner man. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Some blow the bagpipe up, that plays the country round:

The tabour and the pipe some take delight to sound.

Dryden.

Morrice-dancers danced, a maid marian, and a tabour and pipe. Temple.

- To TA'BOUR.† v. n. [tabourer, old French, from the noun.]

1. To drum.

[They] tabouren in your earis many a soun
Right after their imaginacioun.

Chaucer, Leg. of Good Wom. 354.

2. To strike; to smite; to beat.

And her maids shall lead her as with the voice of doves, tabouring upon their breasts. Nah. ii. 7.

- TA'BOURER. n. s. [from tabour.] One who beats the tabour.

Would I could see this tabourer. Shakspeare.

- TA'BOURET. n. s. [from tabour.] A small tabour.

They shall depart the manor before him with trumpets, tabourers, and other minstrelsy. Spect.

- TA'BOURINE. n. s. [French.] A tabour; a small drum.

Trumpeters.

With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines,
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds
together,

Applauding our approach. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

- TABRE. n. s. Tabourer. Obsolete.

I saw a shole of shepherds outgo,

Before them yode a lusty tabre,
That to the meynie a hornpipe plaid, Whereto they dauncen. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

- TA'BRET. n. s. A tabour.

Wherefore didst thou steal away, that I might have sent thee away with mirth and with tabret?
Gen. xxxi. 27.

- TA'BULAR. adj. [tabularis, Lat.]

1. Set down in the form of tables or synopses.

2. Formed in laminæ.

All the nodules that consist of one uniform substance were formed from a point, as the crusted ones, nay, and most of the spotted ones, and indeed all whatever, except those that are tabular and plated. Woodward on Fossils.

3. Set in squares.

- To TA'BULATE.† v. a. [tabula, Lat.]

1. To reduce to tables or synopses.

His [Maittaire's] book of the dialects is a sad heap of confusion: the only way to write on them is to tabulate them with notes, added at the bottom of the page, and references.

Dr. Johnson, in Boswell's Life of him.

2. To shape with a flat surface.

- TA'BULATED. adj. [tabula, Lat.] Having a flat surface.

Many of the best diamonds are pointed with six angles, and some tabulated or plain, and square.

Grew, Mus.

- TACHE.† n. s. [from tack; which was the old word; "tak, or button."] Prompt. Parv.] Any thing taken hold of; a catch; a loop; a button.

Make fifty taches of gold, and couple the curtains together with the taches. Exod. xxvi. 6.

They made several curtains with loops and taches, and so coupled them to one another that they became one tabernacle. By. Reynolds, Serm. (1668,) p. 11.

- TACHYGRAPHY. n. s. [ταχὺς and γραφία.] The art or practice of quick writing.

- TA'CIT. adj. [tacite, Fr. tacitus, Lat.] Silent; implied; not expressed by words.

As there are formal and written leagues respective to certain enemies, so is there a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men, against the common enemy of human society, pirates.

Bacon, Holy War.

In elective governments there is a tacit covenant, that the king of their own making shall make his makers princes. L'Estrange.

Cautiousness not only produces misbecoming expressions and carriage, but is a tacit reproach of some incivility. Locke.

- TA'CITLY. adv. [from tacit.] Silently; without oral expression.

While they are exposing another's weaknesses, they are tacitly aiming at their own commendations.

Addition.

Indulgence to the vices of men can never be tacitly implied, since they are plainly forbidden in Scripture.

Rogers, Sermon.

TACITURN.* adj. [taciturne, Fr. taciturnus, Lat.] Silent; uttering little.

Grieve was very submissive, respectful, and remarkably taciturn.

Smollett.

TACITURNITY. n. s. [taciturnité, French; taciturnitas, Lat.] Habitual silence.

The secretest of natures

Have not more gift in taciturnity.

Shakespeare.

Some women have some taciturnity,

Some nunneries some grains of chastity.

Donne.

Too great loquacity, and too great taciturnity

by fits.

Arbutnot.

To TACK. v. a. [tacher, Breton.]

1. To fasten to anything. It has now a sense approaching to contempt.

Of what supreme almighty pow'r

Is thy great arm, which spans the east and west,

And tacks the centre to the sphere!

Herbert.

True freedom you have well defin'd:

But living as you list, and to your mind,

And loosely tack'd, all must be left behind.

Dryden.

The symmetry of clothes fancy appropriates to the wearer, tacking them to the body as if they belonged to it.

Greiv.

Frame so as to be covered with the hair-cloth, or a blanket tack'd about the edges.

Mortimer.

They serve every turn that shall be demanded, in hopes of getting some commendam tack'd to their sees, to the great discouragement of the inferior clergy.

Swift.

2. To join; to unite; to stitch together.

There's but a shirt and an half in all my company; and the half shirt is two napkins tack'd together, and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves.

Shakespeare.

I tack'd two plays together for the pleasure of variety.

Dryden.

To TACK. v. n. [probably from tackel.]

To turn a ship.

This verserian they construe to be the compass, which is better interpreted the rope that turns the ship; as we say, makes it tack about.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Seeing Holland fall into closer measures with us and Sweden, upon the triple alliance, they have tack'd some points nearer France.

Temple.

On either side they nimbly tack,

Both strive to intercept and guide the wind.

Dryden.

They give me signs

To tack about, and steer another way.

Addison.

TACK.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small nail.

2. The act of turning ships at sea.

At each tack our little fleet grows less,

And, like main'd fowl, swim lagging on the main.

Dryden.

3. Addition; supplement.

Some tacks had been made to money-bills in King Charles's time.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, in 1705.

4. [Tache, Fr.] A spot; a stain.

You do not the thing that you would; that is perhaps perfectly, purely without some tack or mixture.

Hammond, Works, iv. 512.

5. A lease; a bargain. Cheshire and Craven

Dialects. In the former part it is also used for confidence, reliance. See Wilbraham's Gloss.

6. To hold TACK. To last; to hold out.

Tack is still retained in Scotland, and denotes hold or persevering cohesion.

Martins beefs doth bear good tack,

When country folke do dainties lacke.

Tusser.

If this twig be made of wood

That will hold tack, I'll make the fur

Fly 'bout the ears of that old cur.

Hudibras.

TACKER.* n. s. [from tack.] One who makes an addition or supplement. See the third sense of TACK.

The noise has been so long against the tackers, that most of them thought their safest way was to deny it in their several countries.

Account of the Tack to a Bill in Parl. (1705), p. 1.

TACKET.* n. s. [from tack.] A small nail. Barret, Alv. 1580. Used in Scotland. See Jamieson.

TACKLE.† n. s. [tackel, Welsh, an arrow; tacclau, armour or accoutrements, arrows; tacle, old French; any headed shaft or bolt, whose feathers are not waxed, but glued on. Cotgrave.]

1. An arrow.

The tackit smote, and in it went.

Chaucer.

2. Weapons; instruments of action.

She to her tackel fell,

And on the knight left fall a peal

Of blows so fierce, and press'd so home,

That he retir'd.

Hudibras.

Being at work without catching any thing, he resolved to take up his tackle and be gone.

L'Estrange.

3. [Tacclau, Welsh; tackel, Su. Gothic; ornaments navis, rudentes, Ihre; tackel, Dutch.] The ropes of a ship: in a looser sense, all the instruments of sailing.

After at sea a tall ship did appear,

Made all of Heben and white ivory,

The sails of gold, of silk the tackle were,

Mild was the wind, calm seem'd the sea to be.

Spenser.

At the helm

A seeming mermaid steers; the silken tackles

Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands

That rarely frame the office.

Shakespeare.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face

Bears a command in't; though thy tackle's torn,

Thou show'st a noble vessel.

Shaks. Coriol.

A stately ship

With all her bravery on, and tackle trim,

Sails fill'd, and streamers waving,

Courted by all the winds that hold them play.

Milton, S. A.

As for tackle, the Bæotians invented the car,

Dædalus, and his son Icarus, the masts and sails.

Heylin.

Ere yet the tempest roars

Stand to your tackle, mates, and stretch your oars.

Dryden.

If he drew the figure of a ship, there was not a rope among the tackle that escaped him.

Addison, Spect.

To TACKLE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To supply with tackle.

My ships ride in the bay,

Ready to disembody, tackled and mann'd,

Ev'n to my wishes. Beaumont and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

The moralist tells us that a quadrate solid wise man should involve and tackle himself within his own virtue.

Hovell, Lett. i. vi. 58.

TACKLED. adj. [from tackle.] Made of ropes tack'd together.

My man shall

Bring thee cords, made like a tackled stair,

Which to the high top-gallant of my joy

Must be my convoy in the secret night.

Shaks.

TACKLING. n. s. [from tackle.]

1. Furniture of the mast.

They wondered at their ships and their tacklings.

Abbot.

Tackling, as sails and cordage, must be foreseen,

and laid up in store.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Red sheets of lightning o'er the seas are spread,
Our tackling yield, and wrecks at last succeed.

Garth.

2. Instruments of action: as, fishing tackling, kitchen tackling.

I will furnish him with a rod, if you will furnish him with the rest of the tackling, and make him a fisher.

Walton.

TACT.* n. s. [tactus, Lat. tact, French.]

Touch; the sense of feeling: an old word, long disused; but of late revived in the secondary senses of touch, as a masterly or eminent effort, and the power of exciting the affections. See

TOUCH.

Of all creatures, the sense of tact is most exquisite in man, because his body is most temperate; but tact consists in the temper of the prime qualities. Ross, Arc. Microcosm. (1652), p. 66.

TACTICAL. } adj. [τακτικός, τάττω; tac-

TACTICK. } tique, French.] Relating to the art of ranging a battle.

TACTICIAN.* n. s. One skilled in tactics:

a modern word.

TACTICKS. n. s. pl. [τακτικη.] The art of ranging men in the field of battle.

When Tully had read the tacticks, he was thinking on the bar, which was his field of battle.

Dryden.

TACTILE. adj. [tactile, Fr. tactilis, tactum,

Latin.] Susceptible of touch.

At this proud yielding word

She on the scene her tactile senses presented.

Beaumont, Pysche.

We have iron, sounds, light, figuration, tactile qualities; some of a more active, some of a more passive nature.

Hale.

TACTILITY. n. s. [from tactile.] Perceptibility by the touch.

TACTION.† n. s. [taction, Fr. tactio, Latin.] The act of touching. Cockerham.

They neither can speak, or attend to the discourses of others, without being roused by some external taction.

Ld. Chesterfield.

TADPOLE. n. s. [taob, toad, and polia, a young one, Saxon.] A young shapeless frog or toad, consisting only of a body and a tail; a porwiggle.

I'll broach the tadpole on my rapier's point.

Shakespeare.

Poor Tom eats the toad and the tadpole. Shaks.

The result is not a perfect frog but a tadpole, without any feet, and having a long tail to swim with.

Ray.

A black and round substance began to dilate, and after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernible, and at last become what the ancients called gyrinus, we a porwiggle or tadpole.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

TAE'N.† The poetical contraction of taken.

The chewing flocks

Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb

Of knot-grass dew-besrent.

Milton, Comus.

The object of desire once ta'en away,

'Tis then not love, but pity, which we pay.

Dryden.

TAFFATA.† } n. s. [taffetas, Fr. taffetas,

TAFFETA. } Spanish; raparato, Græco-

barb. V. Critop. Emend. in Meursii

Gloss. p. 88.] A thin silk.

All hail, the richest beauties on the earth!

— Beauties no richer than rich taffata.

Shaks.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd;

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,

Three pil'd hyperboles.

Shaks. L. Lab. Lost.

Some think that a considerable diversity of colours argues an equal diversity of nature, but I am not of their mind, for not to mention the changeable taffety, whose colours the philosophers call not real, but apparent.

Boyle on Colours.

TÄFFEREL.* n. s. The upper part of the stern of a ship. Scott.

TAG.† n. s. [tag, Icel. tagg, Su. Goth. cuspis, aculeus, a point.]

1. A point of metal put to the end of a string.

A poor man finding the tag of a point, and putting it into his pocket, one asked him, What he would do with it? He answered, What I find all the year, be it never so little, I lay it up at home till the year's end; and then, with all together, I every new year's day add a dish to my cupboard.

Word, Theol. Treat. (1673), p. 36.

It was the fashion, in those days, to wear much ribbon; which some adorned with tags of metal at the end. Richardson, Life of Milton, p. cxx.

2. Any thing paltry and mean.

If tag and tag be admitted, learned and unlearned, it is the fault of some, not of the law. Whitgift.

Will you hence

Before the tag return, whose rage thou send Like interrupted waters? Shakespeare, Coriol.

The tag-rag people did not clap him and hiss him. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

He invited tag, rag, and bob-tail, to the wedding. L'Estrange.

3. A young sheep. Oftener written teg in this sense.

TÄTAIL. n. s. [tag and tail.] A worm which has the tail of another colour.

They feed on tag worms and lugges. Carew.

There are other worms; as the marsh and tag-tail. Walton.

To TAG.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fit any thing with an end, or point of metal: as, to tag a lace.

There was hardly a thread of the original coat to be seen, but an infinite quantity of lace, and ribands, and fringe, and embroidery, and points; I mean only those tagged with silver; for the rest fell off. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 6.

2. To fit one thing with another, appended.

His courteous host

Tags every sentence with some fawning word,
Such as my king, my prince, at least my lord. Dryden.

'Tis tagg'd with rhyme, like Bercynthian Alys,
The mid-part chimes with art, which never flat is. Dryden.

3. The word is here improperly used.
Compell'd by you to tag in rhimes
The common slanders of the times. Swift.

4. To join. This is properly to taek.

Resistance, and the succession of the house of Hanover, the Whig writers perpetually tag together. Swift.

TAIL.† n. s. [Goth. and Icel. tagl; tægl; Saxon.]

1. That which terminates the animal behind; the continuation of the vertebrae of the back hanging loose behind.
Oft have I seen a hot o'er-weening cur
Run back and bite, because he was witheld,
Who, having suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,
Hath clapt his tail betwixt his legs, and cry'd. Shakespeare.

This sees the cub, and does himself oppose,
And men and boats his active tail confounds. Waller.

The lion will not kick, but will strike such a stroke with his tail, that will break the back of his encounter. More.

Rou'd by the lash of his own stubborn tail,
Our lion now will foreign foes assail. Dryden.

The tail fin is half a foot high, but underneath level with the tail. Grew.

2. The lower part.

The Lord shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above, and not beneath. Deut. xxviii. 13.

3. Any thing hanging long; a catkin.

Duretus writes a great praise of the distilled water of those tails that hang upon willow trees.

Harvey on Consumptions.

4. The hinder part of any thing.

The cottage hind

Hangs o'er the enlightening blaze, and taletful there

Recounts his simple frolics.

Thomson, Winter.

TAL'ENT. n. s. [talentum, Lat.]

1. A talent signified so much weight, or a sum of money, the value differing according to the different ages and countries.

Arbutnot.

Five talents in his debt,

His means most short, his creditors most straight.

Shakespeare.

Two tripods cast in antick mould,

With two great talents of the finest gold.

Dryden.

2. Faculty; power; gift of nature. A metaphor borrowed from the talents mentioned in the holy writ. It is used sometimes seriously, and sometimes lightly.

Many who knew the treasurer's talent in removing prejudice, and reconciling himself to wavering affections, believed the loss of the duke was unreasonable.

Clarendon.

He is chiefly to be considered in his three different talents, as a critic, satyrst, and writer of odes.

Dryden.

'Tis not my talent to conceal my thoughts, Or carry smiles and sunshine in my face, When discontent sits heavy at my heart.

Addison, Cato.

They are out of their element, and logic is none of their talent.

Baker on Learning.

Persons who possess the true talent of rally are like comets; they are seldom seen, and at once admired and feared.

Female Quixote.

He, Agellius, though otherwise a very worthy man, yet having no talent for disputation, recommended Sissinius, his lector, to engage in a conference.

Waterland.

3. Quality; disposition. An improper and mistaken use.

Though the nation generally was without any ill talent to the church in doctrine or discipline, yet they were not without a jealousy that popery was not enough discountenanced.

Clarendon.

It is the talent of human nature to run from one extreme to another.

Swift.

TAL'ENTED.  adj.* [from talent.] Possessing talents. The word is old, but hitherto overpassed; and is now again in use.

What a miserable and restless thing ambition is, when one talented but as a common person, yet, by the favour of his prince, hath gotten that interest, that in a sort all the keys of England hang at his girdle!

Abb. Abbot in Rushworth's Collections, p. 449.

TAL'ES.  n. s.* [Latin.] A supply for men impannelled upon a jury or inquest, and not appearing, or challenged; equal in reputation to those that were impannelled, and present in court; tales de circumstantibus.

Twelve returned upon the principal pannel, or the tales, are sworn to try according to their evidence.

Hale.

At inconsiderable values,

To serve for jurymen or tales.

Hudibras.

TAL'ETELLER.  n. s.* [tale and tell.] One who relates tales or stories.

Tale-tellers, in the north of Ireland, are hired to tell stories of giants and enchanters, to lull people asleep.

Guardian, No. 43.

The minstrels are named separately from the goustours or taletellers.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 174.

TAL'ION.  g. s.* [talio, Lat. "lex talionis." Law of retaliation.

Crimes not capital were punished by fines, flagellation, and the law of talion, eye for eye.

Geddes, Pref. to his Transl. of the Bible, p. xv.

TAL'ISMAN. † n. s. [talism, Arabick.] The Arabian talismans are said to have been images made under such and such constellations, to receive the heavenly influences; either to be a phylactery, or an oracle. See Patrick on Gen. xxxi. 19.] A magical character.

If the physicians would forbid us to pronounce gout, rheumatism, and stone, would that serve like so many talismans to destroy the diseases?

Swift.

Of talismans and sigils knew the power,

And careful watch'd the planetary hour.

Pope.

TALISMA'NICK. adj. [from talisman.] Magical.

The figure of a heart bleeding upon an altar, or held in the hand of a Cupid, has always been looked upon as talismanick in dresses of this nature.

Addison.

To TALK. † v. n. [Italian, Saxon; taelen, Dutch.]

1. To speak in conversation; to speak fluently and familiarly; not in speeches; to converse.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you; but I will not eat with you. Shakspeare.

Now is this vice's dagger become a squire, and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him; and he never saw him but once. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The princes refrained talkings, and laid their hand on their mouth. Job, xxix. 9.

The children of thy people still talk against thee. Ezekiel.

Here free from court-compliances he walks, And with himself, his best adviser, talks. Walker.
As God remembers that we are but flesh, unable to bear the nearer approaches of divinity, and so talks with us as once with Moses through a cloud; so he forgets not that he breathed into us breath of life, a vital active spirit. Decay of Chr. Preach.

Mention the king of Spain, he talks very notably; but if you go out of the Gazette, you drop him. Addison.

2. To prattle; to speak impertinently.

Hypocrites austere*ly talk*

Of purity. Milton, P. L.
My heedless tongue has talk'd away this life. Rome.

Consider well the time when Petavius first began to talk in that manner. Waterland.

3. To give account.

The crystalline sphere, whose balance weighs
The trepidation talk'd. Milton, P. L.
The natural histories of Switzerland talk much of the fall of these rocks, and the great damage done. Addison.

We will consider whether Adam had any such heir as our author talks of. Locke.

4. To speak; to reason; to confer.

Let me talk with thee of thy judgements.

Will ye speak wickedly for God, and talk deceitfully for him? Job, xiii. 7.

It is a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier on Pride.

Talking over the things which you have read with your companions fixes them upon the mind. Watts.

TALK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Oral conversation; fluent and familiar speech.

We do remember; but our argument
Is all too heavy to admit much talk. Shakspeare.
Perceiving his soldiers dismayed, he forbade them to have any talk with the enemy. Annotes, Hist.
How can he get wisdom that driveth oxen, is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bullocks? Ecclesi. xxxviii.

This ought to weigh with those whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.

In various talk th' instructive hours they past,
Who gave the ball, or paid the visit last. Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

I hear a talk up and down of raising our money, as a means to retain our wealth, and keep our money from being carried away. Locke.

3. Subject of discourse.

What delight to be by such extoll'd it,
To live upon their tongues and be their talk,
Of whom to be despis'd were no small praise? Milton, P. R.

TALK. n. s. [talc, French.] A kind of stone.

Stones composed of plates are generally parallel, and flexible and elastic: as, talk, cat-silver or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward on Fossils.

Venetian talk kept in a heat of a glass furnace, though brittle and discoloured, had not lost much of its bulk, and seemed nearer of kin to talk than mere earth. Boyle.

TALKATIVE. adj. [from talk.] Full of prate; loquacious.

If I have held you overlong, lay hardly the fault upon my old age, which in its disposition is talkative. Sidney.

This may prove an instructive lesson to the disaffected, not to build hopes on the talkative zealots of their party. Addison.

I am ashamed I cannot make a quicker progress in the French, where everybody is so courteous and talkative. Addison.

The coxcomb bird so talkative and grave,
That from his cage cries cuckoo, where, and knave;

Though many a passenger he rightly call,
You hold him no philosopher at all. Pope.

TALKATIVENESS. n. s. [from talkative.] Loquacity; garrulity; fulness of prate.

We call this talkativeness a feminine vice; but he that shall appropriate loquacity to women, may perhaps sometimes need to light Diogenes's candle to seek a man. Gou. of the Tongue.

Learned women have lost all credit by their impertinent talkativeness and conceit. Swift.

TALKER. n. s. [from talk.]

1. One who talks.

Let me give for instance some of those writers or talkers who deal much in the words Nature or Fate. Watts.

2. A loquacious person; a prattler.

Keep me company but two years,
Thou shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.
— Farewell, I'll grow a talker for this jeer. Shakspeare.

If it were desirable to have a child a more brisk talker, ways might be found to make him so; but a wise father had rather his son should be useful when a man, than pretty company. Locke on Education.

3. A boaster; a bragging fellow.

The greatest talkers in the days of peace, have been the most pusillanimous in the day of temptation. Bp. Taylor.

TALKING. n. s. [from talk.] Oral conversation.

Neither filthiness, nor foolish talkings, nor jesting, which are not convenient. Ephes. v. 4.

TALKY. adj. [from talk.] Consisting of talk; resembling talk.

The talky flakes in the strata were all formed before the subsistence, along with the sand. Woodward on Fossils.

TALL. adj. [tāl, Welsh. Dr. Johnson.

— Mr. H. Tooke calls it the past participle of the Saxon trihan, to lift up, as he chooses to paraphrase and apply the word, which properly means to cultivate, to till. We find, however, the old Brit. word tāl, high of stature, traced to taal, Chald. a high tree; talb, lofty; tala, Arab. long. See Davies and Richards.

1. High in stature.

Bring word, how tall she is.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Two of nobler shape,
Erect and tall. Milton, P. L.

2. High; lofty.

Winds rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,
Though rooted deep as high, and sturdiest oaks,

They lop, and lop, on this and that hand, cutting away the tall, sound, and substantial timber, that used to shelter them from the winds. Davenant.

May they encrease as fast, and spread their boughs,
As the high fame of their great owner grows:
May he live long enough to see them all

Dark shadows cast, and as his palace tall! Waller.

3. Sturdy; lusty; bold; spirited; courageous.

I'll swear thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk; but I would thou wouldst be a tall fellow of thy hands. Shaks. Wint. Tale.

Spoke like a tall fellow, that respects his reputation. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

He manned it [his castle] with a very great number of tall soldiers. Bacon, Hist. of Hen. VII.

I know your spirit to be tall; pray, be not vex'd. Beaumont and Fl. Cup. Revenge.

TALLAGE. n. s. [tailage, Fr.] Impost; excise.

The people of Spain were better affected unto Philip than to Ferdinand, because he had imposed upon them many taxes and tallages. Bacon, Hen. VII.

To TALLAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To lay an impost on.

Edward I. tallaged his demesnes very heavily, by commissioners of his own.

Bp. Ellys, Tracts on Lib. P. II. (1765), p. 57.

TALLOW. n. s. [Icel. tollr; Dan. tol; Su.-Goth. and Germ. tal; talge; which Wachter deduces from the Welsh deil-haw, to flow, to proceed or come from.]

The grease or fat of an animal; coarse suet.

She's the kitchen wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light.

I warrant her rags, and the tallow in them, will burn a Lapland winter. Shakspeare.

The new world is stocked with such store of kine and bulls, brought hither out of Europe since the first discovery, that the Spaniards kill thousands of them yearly, for their tallow and hides only. Heylin.

Snuff the candles close to the tallow, which will make them run. Swift.

To TALLOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To grease; to smear with tallow.

Now fletes the tallow'd keel. Ld. Surrey, Virg. Æn. 4.

TALLOWCHANDLER. n. s. [tallow and chandelier, Fr.] One who makes candles of tallow, not of wax.

Nastiness, and several nasty trades, as tallow-chandlers, butchers, and neglect of cleansing of gutters, are great occasions of a plague. Harvey on the Plague.

TALLOWFACED. adj. [tallow and face.] Having a pale, sickly complexion.

Every lover admires his mistress, though she be deformed, wrinkled, pimply, tallow-faced. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 524.

TALLOWISH. adj. [from tallow.] Having the nature of tallow.

TALLOWY. adj. [from tallow.] Greasy.

TALLY. n. s. [from tailleur, to cut, Fr.]

1. A stick notched or cut in conformity to another stick, and used to keep accounts by.

So right his judgement was cut fit,
And made a tally to his wit. Hudibras.

The only tallies in esteem at present are those of Exchange-Alley; one tally is worth a grove of bays. Garth.

Have you not seen a baker's maid
Between two equal panniers sway'd?
Her tallies useless lie and idle,

If plac'd exactly in the middle. Prior.

From his rug the skewer he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes;
With just resentment flings it on the ground,
There take my tally of ten thousand pound. Swift.

2. Any thing made to suit another.

So suited in their minds and persons,
That they were fram'd the tallies for each other:
If any alien love had interpos'd,
It must have been an eye-sore to beholders. Dryd.
To TA'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit; to suit; to cut out, so as to answer any thing.

Nor sister either had, nor brother;
They seem'd just tally'd for each other. Prior.
They are not so well tallied to the present juncture. Pope.

To TA'LLY. v. n. To be fitted; to conform; to be suitable.

I found pieces of tiles that exactly tallied with the channel. Addison on Italy.

TA'LLY.* adv. [from tall.] Stoutly; with spirit.

You, Lodowick,
That stand so tally on your reputation,
You shall be he shall speak it.

Beaumont and Fl. Captain.
TA'LMUD.† } n. s. [Hebrew.] The TA'LMUD. } book containing the

Lightfoot, Miscell. p. 68.
TA'LMUDIST.* n. s. [from talmud.] One well versed in the talmud.

The Jewish talmudists take upon them to determine how God spends his whole time.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 256.
Ask a talmudist what ails the modesty of his marginal Keri, that Moses and all the prophets cannot persuade him to pronounce the textual Chetiv.

Milton, Areopagitica.
TALMUD'ISTICK.* adj. [from talmudist.] Talmudical.

The name Ariel came from the talmudistick mysteries, with which the learned Jews had infected this science. Watson, Hist. E. p. iii. 478.

TA'LNES. n. s. [from tall.] Height of stature; prosperity.

An hideous giant, horrible and high,
That with his talness seem'd to threaten the sky.

Spenser.
The eyes behold so many naked bodies, as for talness of stature could hardly be equalled in any country. Hayward.

TA'LOX. n. s. [talon, Fr.] The claw of a bird of prey.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer talons. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Upward the noble bird directs his wing,
And towering round his master's earth-born foes,
Swift he collects his fatal stock of ire.
Lifts his fierce talon high, and darts the forked fire. Prior.

TA'MARIND-Tree. n. s. [tamarindus, Lat.]

The flower of the tamarind-tree consists of several leaves which are so placed as to resemble a papilionaceous one in some measure; but these expand circularly, from whose many-leaved flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a flat pod, containing many flat angular seeds surrounded with an acid blackish pulp. Miller.

Lenitives are cassia, tamarinds, manna. Wiseman.

Lay me reclind
Beneath the spreading tamarind, that shakes,
Fann'd by the breeze, its fever-cooling fruit. Thomson.

TA'MARISK. n. s. [tamarice, Latin.] A tree.

The flowers of the tamarisk are roseaceous. Miller.

Tamarisk is a tree that grows tall, and its wood is medicinal. Mortimer.

TAMBOUR.* n. s. [old Fr. tambour, a small drum; tambur, Arab. the same.]

1. A tambourine; which see.

2. A frame resembling a drum, on which a kind of embroidery is worked; the embroidery so made.

3. [In architecture.] A member of the Corinthian and composite capital, somewhat resembling a drum; a kind of porch; a round stone, or course of stones.

TAMBOUR'NE.† n. s. [tamborin, Spanish; from the Arab. tambur.] A kind of drum. What we now call the tambourin, is different from the tabor; as it is played on with the hand or fingers, not with a stick. Spenser writes this word tamburin, and B. Jonson timburine.
Calliope with Muses moe,
Soon as thy oaten pipe began to sound,
Their ivory lutes and tamburines forego. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

The bells, pipes, tabours, timburines ring.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

TAME. adj. [tame, Saxon; taem, Dutch; tam, Danish.]

1. Not wild; domestic.
Thales the Milesian said, That of all wild beasts a tyrant is the worst, and of all tame beasts a flatterer. Addison.

2. Crushed; subdued; depressed; dejected; spiritless; heartless.
If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it. Shakespeare.

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull. Shakespeare.

A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shaks. K. Lear.

Praise him, each savage furious beast,
That on his stores do daily feast;
And you, tame slaves of the laborious plough,
Your weary knees to your Creator bow. Roscommon.

3. Spiritless; unanimated: as, a tame poem.

A low phrase.

To TAME. v. a. [gatamjan, Gothic; tamman, Saxon; tammen, Dutch.]

1. To reduce from wildness; to reclaim; to make gentle.

Those that tame wild horses,
Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits. Shaks.

2. To subdue; to crush; to depress; to conquer.

If the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the offences,
Humanity must performe prey on itself. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

A puling cuckold would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Shaks.

They cannot tame
Or overcome their riches; not by making
Baths, orchards, fish-pools, letting in of seas
Here, and then there forcing them out again. B. Jonson.

A race unconquer'd, by their climate made bold,
The Caledonians, arm'd with want and cold,
Have been for ages kept for you to tame. Waller.

TA'MEABLE. adj. [from tame.] Susceptive of taming.

Ganzas are supposed to be great fowls, of a strong flight, and easily tameable; divers of which may be so brought up as to join together in carrying the weight of a man. Wilkins.

TA'MELESS.* adj. [tame and less.] Wild; untamed.

The tameless steed could well his waggon wield.
Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 1.

TA'MELY. adv. [from tame.] Not wildly; meanly; spiritlessly.

True obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

What courage tamely could to death consent,
And not by striking first the blow prevent? Dryden.

Once a champion of renown,
So tamely can you bear the ravish'd crown? Dryden.

Has he given way?
Did he look tamely on, and let them pass? Addison.

Can you love and reverence your prelate, whom you tamely suffer to be abused? Swift.

TA'MENESS. n. s. [from tame.]

1. The quality of being tame; not wildness.

2. Want of spirits; timidity.

Such a conduct must appear rather like tameness than beauty, and expose his authority to insults. Rogers.

TA'MER. n. s. [from tame.] Conqueror; subduer.

He, great tamer of all human art,
Dulness! whose good old cause I yet defend. Pope.

TA'MINY.† n. s. [estamine, Fr. whence our old word stamin, which see.] A kind of woollen stuff: called also tamin and tammy.

'Estamine' is the stuff tamine.
Colgrave, in V. Estamine.

TA'MKIN. n. s. The stopple of the mouth of a great gun.

To TA'MFER. v. n. [of uncertain derivation, derived by Skinner from tempero, Lat.]

1. To be busy with physick.

'Tis in vain
To tamper with your crazy brain,
Without trepanning of your skull
As often as the moon's at full. Hudibras.

He tried washes to bring him to a better complexion, but there was no good to be done; the very tampering cast him into a disease. I. Estrange.

2. To meddle; to have to do without fitness or necessity.

That key of knowledge, which should give us entrance into the recesses of religion, is by so much tampering and wrenching made useless. Dec. of Chr. Priety.

'Tis dang'rous tampering with a muse,
The profit's small, and you have much to lose:
For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
Degenerate lines degrade the attained race. Roscommon.

Earl Waltheof, being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conspiracy; but repenting next morning, repaired to the king, and discovered the whole matter: notwithstanding which he was beheaded upon the defeat of the conspiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it. Addison, Freeholder.

3. To deal; to practise secretly.

For Fleetwood, Desborough, and Lambert.

Hudibras.

To TAN. v. a. [tannen, Dutch; tanner, French.]

1. To impregnate or imbue with bark.

A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some liny soil, was tanned or turned into a kind of leather. Grew, Mus.

Black cattle produce tallow, hides, and beef; but the greatest part of the hides are exported raw for want of bark to tan them. Swift.

They sell us their bark at a good price for tan-ning our hides into leather. Swift, Miscell.

2. To imbrown by the sun.

His face all tann'd with scorching sunny ray,
As he had travell'd many a summer's day
Through boiling sands of Araby and Ind.

Like sun-parch'd quarters on the city gates,
Such is thy tann'd skin's lamentable state. Spenser.

A brown for which Heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Donne.

TAN.* n. s. The bark of the oak; the ozone with which tanners prepare their leather. Ash.

TANE for taken, ta'en. Ill spelt.

Two trophies tane from th' east and western shore,
And both those nations twice triumphed o'er. May, Virg.

TANG.† n. s. [tanghe, Dutch, acid.]

1. A strong taste; a taste left in the mouth.

Seasoning matters otherwise distasteful and insipid with an unusual and hence grateful tang.
Barrow, vol. i. S. 14.

Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons—so that although the body of the liquor should be poured out again, yet still it leaves that tang behind it. South, Serm. ii. 368.

It is strange that the soul should never once recall over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the cask, and derive their original from that union. Locke.

2. Relish; taste. A low word.

There was not the least tang of religion, which is indeed the worst affectation in any thing he said or did. Atterbury.

3. Something that leaves a sting or pain behind it.

She had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a sailor, go hang. Shaks. Tempest.

It hath not the least tang of misery in it, no bitter farewell nor appendant sting to it.

4. Sound; tone: this is mistaken for tone or twang.

There is a pretty affectation in the Allemain, which gives their speech a different tang from ours.
Holder, Elem. of Sp. p. 78.

To TANG. v. n. [This is, I think, mistaken for twang.] To ring with.

Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with thy servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state;
put thyself into the trick of singularity.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

TANG.* n. s. [tang, Su. Goth.] A kind of sea-weed: called in some places tangle.

Calling it the sea of weeds, or flag, or rush, or tange. Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655), p. 11.

TANGENT. n. s. [tangent, French; tangens,
Latin.]

Tangent, in trigonometry, is a right line perpendicularly raised on the extremity of a radius, and which touches a circle so as not to cut it; but yet intersects another line without the circle called a secant that is drawn from the centre, and which cuts the arc to which it is a tangent.

Nothing in this hypothesis can retain the planets in their orbs, but they would immediately desert them and the neighbourhood of the sun, and vanish away in tangents to their several circles into the mundane space. Bentley, Serm.

TANGIBILITY. n. s. [from tangible.] The quality of being perceived by the touch.

TANGIBLE.† adj. [tangible, Fr. from tango, Lat.] Perceptible by the touch.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the consort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

There needs no confutation of it; the impurity is visible and tangible.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 2. § 10.
By the touch, the tangible qualities of bodies are discerned, as hard, soft, smooth. Locke.

To TANGLE.† v. a. [See To EN-TANGLE.]

1. To implicate; to knit together.

The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton, Ode Nativ.
The blind mazes of this tangled wood. Milton, Comus.

2. To ensnare; to entrap.

She means to tangle mine eyes too.
'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream.

I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen. Shaks.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Shall be full fraught with serviceable wows.

If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee.

Now ly'st victorious
Among thy slain, self-kill'd,
Not willingly, but tangled in the fold
Of dire necessity. Milton, S. A.

Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw
Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets.

With subtle cobweb cheats,
They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;
In which when once they are entangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled.

3. To embroil; to embarrass.

The greater it is, and the more things it is tangled withal, the harder it will be to do it so well.
Wood, Tr. Bp. Gard. De. Ver. Ob. (1553), fol. xliii. b.

When my simple weakness strays,
Tangled in forbidden ways:
He, my shepherd! is my guide,
He's before me, on my side.

To TANGLE. v. n. To be entangled.

Shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast. Anon.

TANGLE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A knot of things interwoven in one another, or different parts of the same thing perplexed.

He leading swiftly roll'd
In tangles, and made intricate seem straight,
To mischief swift. Milton, P. L.

Sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neera's hair.

2. [From tang.] A kind of sea-weed.

TANIST.† n. s. [an Irish word; an taanister, Erse. Dr. Johnson. — See whether this word may not be derived from thane, which was commonly used among the Danes, and also among the Saxons in England, for a noble man and a principal officer. Sir James Ware.] A kind of captain or governor.

Presently after the death of any of their captains, they assemble themselves to chuse another in his stead, and nominate commonly the next brother, and then next to him do they chuse next of the blood to be tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captaincy. Spenser on Ireland.

TANISTRY.† n. s. [from tanist.] A succession made up of inheritance and election. Burke.

The Irish hold their lands by tanistry, which is no more than a personal estate for his life-time that is tanist, by reason he is admitted thereunto by election. Spenser on Ireland.

If the Irish be not permitted to purchase estates of freeholds, which might descend to their children, must they not continue their custom of tanistry? which makes all their possessions uncertain. Davies on Ireland.

By the Irish custom of tanistry, the chieftains of every country, and the chief of every sept, had no longer estate than for life in their chiefties; and when their chieftains were dead, their sons, or next heirs, did not succeed them, but their tanists, who were elective, and purchased their elections
by strong hand. Davies on Ireland.

TANK.† n. s. [tangue, French.] A large cistern or basin.

I saw a tank or magazine of water, a very stately work indeed. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 43.

Handle your pruning knife with dexterity; go tightly to your business: you have cost me much,
and must earn it: here's plentiful provision, rascal; salading in the garden and water in the tank; and in holy days, the licking of a platter of rice when you deserve it. Dryden, Don Sebast.

TANKARD.† n. s. [tanguaerd, Fr. tankaerd, Dutch; tancaird, Irish; probably, by a metathesis, from the Latin cantharus.] A large vessel with a cover, for strong drink.

Hath his tanhard touch'd your brain?
Sure they're fall'n asleep again. B. Jonson.

Marius was the first who drank out of a silver tankard, after the manner of Bacchus.

When any calls for ale, fill the largest tankard cup top full. Swift.

TANLING.* n. s. [from tan.] One scorched by the heat of summer. This seems to be the meaning of the word in the following passage, as opposed to those who shiver in winter. Nevertheless Dr.

Johnson has printed it tantling; and, deriving it from Tantalus, has defined it

"one seized with hopes of pleasure unattainable." Dr. Scott and Dr. Ash have hence adopted tantling. But, in the correct edition of Shakspeare printed in 1803, tantling is the word, though no note of any various reading, nor any explanation, accompanies it.

The king
Hath not deserv'd my service, nor your loves;
Who find in my exile the want of breeding,
The certainty of this hard life; aye hopeless
To have the courtesy your cradle promis'd,
But to be still hot summer's tanlings, and
The shirinking slaves of winter.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

A lively representation of a person lying under the torments of such a tantalism, or platonick hell.

Addison, Spect.

TANTALIZATION. n. s. [from tantalize.] Act of tantalizing; state of being tantalized.

Rozinante's pains and tantalizations, in this night's round, were more irksome to the beast than all his other outridings; which were ever, though somewhat long first, gratified with the welcome rest of an inn.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. (1653), p. 253.

TO TANTALIZE. v. a. [from Tantalus, whose punishment was to starve among fruits and water which he could not touch.] To torment by the shew of pleasures which cannot be reached.

Thy vain desires, at strife

Within themselves, have tantaliz'd thy life.

Dryden.

The maid once sped was not suffered to tantalize the male part of the commonwealth. Addison.

TANTALIZER. n. s. [from tantalize.] One who tantalizes.

I made, however, no discovery of my determination to this fair tantalizer; willing to allow her all the merit of so generous an interference with her great friends on my behalf.

Wakefield, Mem. 227.

TANTAMOUNT. n. s. [Fr.] Equivalent.

God hath inserted it into our reasonable natures; or by his providence hath conveyed it into the minds of all men, which is tantamount unto it.

Glanville, Serm. p. 286.

If one third of our coin were gone, and men had equally one third less money than they have, it must be tantamount; what I 'scape of one third less, another must make up. Locke.

TANTIVY. n. s. [from the note of a hunting horn, so expressed in articulate sounds. From tantà vñ, says Skinner. Dr. Johnson.—The old French language has tentiveur, to denote an eager person; "homme qui est tenté par tout ce qu'il voit; avide, &c." Roq.] To ride tantivy is to ride at great speed.

Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:

When it is lighted come and call me. Shakespeare.

My daughter and little son we'll dress

With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,

And rattles in their hands. Shakespeare.

If any snatch the pure taper from my hand, and hold it to the devil, he will only burn his own fingers, but shall not rob me of the reward of my good intention. Bp. Taylor.

There the fair light,

Like Hero's taper in the window plac'd,
Such fate from the malignant air did find,
As that exposed to the boisterous wind. Waller.

To see this fleet

Heaven, as if there wanted lights above,
For tapers made two glaring comets rise. Dryden.

TAPER. adj. [from the form of a taper.] Regularly narrowed from the bottom to the top; pyramidal; conical.

Her taper fingers, and her panting breast,
He praises. Dryden.

TARTAR.† n. s. [tartarus, Lat.]

1. Hell. A word used by the old poets, now obsolete.

With this the damned ghosts he governeth,
And furies rules, and tartare tempereth.

Spenser.

He's in tartar limbo worse than hell;

A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,

One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel.

Shakspeare.

2. [Tarte, Fr.] Tartar is what sticks to wine casks, like a hard stone, either white or red, as the colour of the wine from whence it comes: the white is preferable, as containing less dross or earthy parts: the best comes from Germany, and is the tartar of the Rhenish wine.

Quincy.

The fermented juice of grapes is partly turned into liquid drops or lees, and partly into that crust or dry feculency that is commonly called tartar; and this tartar may by the fire be divided into five differing substances, four of which are not acid, and the other not so manifestly acid as the tartar itself.

Boyle.

3. To catch a TARTAR. See the fifteenth sense of To CATCH.

And the best portion of the earth lay waste. Waller.

8. To enjoy sparingly.

This fery game your active youth maintain'd,

Not yet by years extinguish'd, though restrain'd;

You season still with sports your serious hours,

For age but tastes of pleasures, youth devours. Dryden.

TASTE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of tasting; gustation.

Best of fruits, whose taste gave elocation.

Milton, P. L.

2. The sense by which the relish of any thing on the palate is perceived.

Bees delight more in one flower than another, and therefore have taste. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Delicacies of taste, sight, smell. Milton, P. L.

The tardy plants in our cold orchards plac'd,

Reserve their fruit for the next age's taste. Waller.

3. Sensibility; perception.

I have almost forgot the taste of fears:

The time has been, my senses would have cool'd

To hear a night shriek. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Music in the close,

As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

4. That sensation which all things taken into the mouth give particularly to the tongue, the papillæ of which are the principal instruments hereof. Quincy.

Manna was like coriander seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.

Erod. xvi. 31.

Though there be a great variety of tastes, yet, as in smells, they have only some few general names. Locke.

5. Intellectual relish or discernment.

Seeing they pretend no quarrel at other psalms which are in like manner appointed to be daily read, why do these so much offend and dispense their tastes? Hooker.

Sion's songs to all true tastes excelling,

Where God is prais'd aright. Milton, P. R.

I have no taste

Of popular applause. Dryden, Span. Friar.

As he had no taste of true glory, we see him equipped like an Hercules, with a club and a lion's skin. Addison.

This metaphor would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste which gives us a relish of every flavour. Addison.

Your way of life, in my taste, will be the best.

Pope.

How ill a taste for wit and sense prevails in the world! Swift.

Pleasure results from a sense to discern, and a taste to be affected with beauty. Seed, Serm.

However contradictory it may be in geometry, it is true in taste, that many little things will make a great one. Reynolds.

6. An essay; a trial; an experiment. Not in use.

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this as an essay or taste of my virtue. Shakspeare.

7. A small portion given as a specimen. They thought it not safe to resolve, till they had a taste of the people's inclination.

Which the kind soil with milky sap supplies,

Can move. Pope.

TA'STELESS.† adj. [from taste.]

1. Having no power of perceiving taste.

2. Having no relish or power of stimulating the palate; insipid.

By depurating chemical oils, and reducing them to an elementary simplicity, they could never be made tasteless. Boyle.

3. Having no power of giving pleasure; insipid.

If by his manner of writing a critick is heavy and tasteless, I throw aside his criticisms. Addison, Spect.

The understanding cannot, by its natural light, discover spiritual truths; and the corruption of our will and affections renders them tasteless and insipid to us. Rogers, Sermon.

4. Having no intellectual gust.

With all his faults, [as a prose-writer,] and exclusive of his character as a poet, he [Milton] must ever remain the only learned author of that tasteless age in which he flourished.

Ortery on Swift, p. 217.

TASTELESSNESS.† n. s. [from tasteless.]

1. Insipidity; want of relish.

They are tainted with that creature vanity, a tastelessness (as it were) that is in all created pleasure or profit external.

At the archdeacon's visitation, the archdeacon shall appoint the curate to certain taxes of the New Testament, to be conned without book; and at their next synod to exact a rehearsal of them.
Articles of Eccl. Visitation and Inquiry, (1564.)

To TAX. v. a. [taxer, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To load with imposts.
Jehoiakim gave the silver and gold to Pharaoh, but he taxed the land to give the money.
2 Kings, xliii. 35.

2. [Taxo, Lat.] To charge; to censure; to accuse. It has of or with, and sometimes for, before the fault imputed, and is used both of persons and things.

How many hath he killed? I promised to eat all of his killing. — Niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you.
Shakspeare.

I am not justly to be taxed with any presumption for meddling with matters wherein I have no dealing.
Ralegh.

Tax not divine disposal: wisest men
Have err'd, and by bad women been deceived.
Milton, S. A.

They cannot tax others' omissions towards them without a tacit reproach of their own.
Dec. of Chr. Piety.

He taxed not Homer nor Virgil for interesting their gods in the wars of Troy and Italy; neither would he have taxed Milton for his choice of a supernatural argument.
Dryden.

Men's virtues I have commended as freely as I have taxed their crimes.
Dryden.
He call'd him back aloud, and tax'd his fear;
And sure enough he heard, but durst not hear.
Dryden.

Like some rich and mighty murderer,
Too great for prison which he breaks with gold,
Who fresher for new mischief does appear,
And dares the world to tax him with the old.
Dryden.

If this be chance, it is extraordinary; and I dare not call it more, for fear of being taxed with superstition.
Dryden.

If he taxes both of long delay,
My guilt is less, who sooner came away.
Dryden.
This salutation cannot be taxed with flattery, since it was directed to a prince, of whom it had been happy for Rome if he had never been born, or if he had never died.
Addison.

TAXABLE.† adj. [from tax.] That may be taxed.
Sherwood.

TAXATION. n. s. [taxation, Fr. taxatio, Lat. from tax.]

1. The act of loading with taxes; impost; tax.

The subjects could taste no sweeter fruits of having a king than grievous taxations to some vain purposes; laws made rather to find faults than to prevent faults.
Sidney.

I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage; my words are as full of peace as matter.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

He daily such taxations did exact,
As were against the order of the state.
Daniel.

Various news I heard,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new;
All neither wholly false, nor wholly true.
Pope.

2. Accusation; scandal.
My father's love is enough to honour; speak no more of him, you'll be whipt for taxation one of these days.
Shakspeare.

TAXER. n. s. [from tax.] One who taxes.

These rumours begot scandal against the king, taxing him for a great taxer of his people.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

TEA.† n. s. [a word, I suppose, Chinese; thé, Fr. "Tea was first imported from Holland by the earls of Arlington and Ossory, in 1666; from their ladies the women of quality learned its use. Its price was then three pounds a pound, and continued the same to 1707. In 1715, we began to use green tea; and the practice of drinking it descended to the lower class of the people." Dr. Johnson's Review of Hanway's Journal.] A Chinese plant, of which the infusion has lately been much drunk in Europe.

The muses' friend, tea, does our fancy aid,
Repress those vapours which the head invade.
Waller.

One has a design of keeping an open tea table.
Addison.

I have filled a tea pot, and received a dish of it.
Addison.

He swept down a dozen tea dishes.
Spectator.
Nor will you encourage the common tea table talk.
Spectator.

Green leaves of tea contain a narcotick juice, which exudes by roasting; this is permed with great care before it is exposed to sale.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A living tea pot stands; one arm held out,
One bent; the handle this, and that the spout.
Pope.

The mistress of the tea shop may give half an ounce.
Swift.

The fear of being thought pedants hath taken many young divines off from their severer studies, which they have exchanged for plays, in order to qualify them for tea tables.
Swift.

When you sweep, never stay to pick up tea spoons.
Swift.

To TEACH.† v. a. pret. and part. pass. taught, sometimes taached, which is now obsolete. [tæcan, Saxon. Dr. Johnson.—From the Swed. te, Icel. tia, to show: the derivation of which by Stiernh. from the M. Goth. ataugian, to show, (compounded of at, to, and augo, the eye,) Serenius pronounces highly ingenious and probable. See also Wachter in V. ZEIGEN.]

1. To instruct; to inform, as a master: correlative to learn.

I am too sudden bold:
To teach a teacher ill besemeth me.
Shaks.

The Lord will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths.
Isa. ii. 3.

Teach us by what means to shun
The inclement seasons.
Milton, P. L.

2. To deliver any doctrine or art, or words to be learned.

Moses wrote this song, and taught it.
Deut. xxxi. 22.

In vain they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.
St. Matt. xv. 9.

They teach all nations what of him they learn'd.
Milton, P. L.

3. To show; to exhibit so as to impress upon the mind.

He is a good divine that follows his own instructions; I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow my own teaching. Shakespeare.

If some men teach wicked things, it must be that others should practise them. South, Sermon.

4. To tell; to give intelligence.

Huswives are taught, instead of a clocke, How winter night passeth by crowing of cocke. Tusser.

To TEACH. v. n. To perform the office of an instructor.

I have labour'd, And with no little study, that my teaching, And the strong course of my authority, Might go one way. Shakespeare.

The heads judge for reward, the priests teach for hire, and the prophets divine for money. Mic. iii. 11.

TEACHABLE. adj. [from teach.] Docile; susceptible of instruction.

'Tis sufficient that matters of faith and religion be propounded in such a way, as to render them highly credible, so as an honest and teachable man may willingly and safely assent to them, and according to the rules of prudence be justified in so doing. Wilkins.

We ought to bring our minds free, unbiased, and teachable to learn our religion from the word of God. Watts.

TEACHABLENESS.† n. s. [from teachable.] Docility; willingness to learn; capacity to learn.

Docility, teachableness, tractableness, is the property of wisdom; and he that is wise, is nearest unto happiness. Granger on Eccles. (1621.) p. 105.

TEACHER. n. s. [from teach.]

1. One who teaches; an instructor; preceptor.

Nature is no sufficient teacher what we should do that may attain unto life everlasting. Hooker.

I went into the temple, there to hear The teachers of our law, and to propose What might improve my knowledge or my own. Milton, P. R.

These were notions born with us; such as we were taught without the help of a teacher. South, Sermon.

Imperious, with a teacher's air, Boastful he claims a right to wisdom's chair. Blackmore.

2. One who without regular ordination assumes the ministry.

Dissenting teachers are under no incapacity of accepting civil and military employments. Swift.

3. A preacher; one who is to deliver doctrine to the people.

For the choice of a governor more sufficient, the teachers in all the churches assembled themselves. Raleigh.

Our lecture men, and some others, whom precise people stile powerful teachers, do seldom honour it. White.

Wolves shall succeed for teachers. Milton, P. L. He may teach his diocese who ceases to be able to preach to it; he may do it by appointing teachers, and by a vigilant exacting from them the instruction of their flocks. South.

TEAD, or TEDE.† n. s. [tede, old Fr. teda, Lat.] A torch; a flambeau. Not in use.

A bushy tead a groom did light, And sacred lamp in secret chamber hide. Spenser, F. Q.

Hymen is awake, And long since ready from his inask to move, With his bright tead that flames with many a flake. Spenser, Epithal.

TEAGUE.† n. s. A name of contempt used for an Irishman.

His case appears to me like honest Teague's, When he was run away with by his legs. Prior.

TEAL. n. s. [teelingh, Dutch.] A wild fowl of the duck kind.

Some serve for food to us, and some but to feed themselves; amongst the first sort we reckon the dip-chick, coots, teal, wiggon.

TEAM. n. s. [temo, the team of a carriage, Latin; team, Sax. a yoke.]

1. A number of horses or oxen drawing at once the same carriage.

Thee a ploughman all unwitting found, As he his toilsome team that way did guide, And brought thee up in ploughman's state to bide. Spenser.

We fairies that do run By the triple Hecate's team, From the presence of the sun, Following darkness like a dream, Now are frolick. Shaks. Mids. Night's Dream.

Making such difference betwixt wake and sleep, As is the difference betwixt day and night, The hour before the heav'nly harness'd team Begins his golden progress in the east. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who 'tis I love. Shaks.

After the declining sun Had chang'd the shadows, and their task was done, Home with their weary team they took their way. Roscommon.

He heav'd with more than human force to move A weighty stone, the labour of a team. Dryden. In stiff clays they may plough one acre of wheat with a team of horse. Mortimer.

2. Any number passing in a line. Like a long team of snowy swans on high, Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky. Dryden.

To TEAM.* v. a. [from the noun.] To join together in a team.

By this the Night forth from the darksome bower Of Erebus her teamed steeds gan call. Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

TEAR.† n. s. [ea in this word is pronounced ee; and tear rhymes to cheer; tagr, M. Goth. teap, Sax. daigr, Welsh and Armor. ðæppor, Gr. all signifying the same.]

1. The water which violent passion forces from the eyes.

She comes; and I'll prepare My tear stain'd eyes to see her miseries. Shaks. The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me, Knowing, that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore

With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkindness. Shakespeare.

Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear In all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me. Let's dry our eyes. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Tears are the effects of compression of the moisture of the brain upon dilatation of the spirits. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Any moisture trickling in drops. She silently a gentle tear let fall. Milton, P. L.

Let Araby extol her happy coast, Her fragrant flow'rs, her trees with precious tears, Her second harvests. Dryden.

To TEAR.† v. a. pret. tore, anciently tare; part. pass. turn. [fairan, gatairan, M. Goth. taera, Su. Goth. tæpan, Sax. ea is pronounced as a, and tear rhymes to square.]

1. To pull in pieces; to lacerate; to rend; to separate by violent pulling.

Come, seeling night, And with thy bloody and invisible hand

Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond Which keeps me pale. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The one went out from me; and I said, Surely he is torn in pieces, and I saw him not since. Gen. xlii. 28.

John tore off lord Strut's servants' clothes; now and then they came home naked. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Ambassadors sent to Carthage were like to be torn to pieces by the populace. Arbuthnot.

2. To laniate; to wound with any sharp point drawn along.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair, The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tare. Shakespeare.

Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning to comfort them for the dead. Jer. xvi. 7.

3. To break or take away by violence. As storms the skies, and torments tear the ground, Thus tear'd the prince, and scatter'd death around. Dryden.

4. To divide violently; to shatter.

Is it not as much reason to say, that God destroys fatherly authority, when he suffers one in possession of it to have his government torn in pieces, and shared by his subjects? Locke.

5. To pull with violence; to drive violently.

He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair. Dryden.

From harden'd oak, or from a rock's cold womb, At least thou art from some fierce tigress come; Or on rough seas from their foundation torn, Got by the winds, and in a tempest born. Dryden. Blush rather, that you are a slave to passion, Which, like a whirlwind, tears up all your virtues, And gives you not the leisure to consider. A. Phillips.

6. To take away by sudden violence.

Solyman Rhodes and Buda from the Christians tore. Waller.

The hand of fate Has torn thee from me, and I must forget thee. Addison.

7. To make a violent rent.

In the midst a tearing groan did break The name of Antony. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

To TEAR. v. n. [tieren, Dutch.] To fume; to rave; to rant turbulently.

All men transported into outrages for small trivial matters, fall under the innuendo of this bull, that ran tearing mad for the pinching of a mouse. L'Estrange.

TEAR. n. s. [from the verb.] A rent; a fissure.

TEARER. n. s. [from To tear.] One who rends or tears; one who blusters.

TEARFALLING. adj. [tear and fall.] Tender; shedding tears.

I am in So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin: Tear falling ply dwells not in this eye. Shakespeare.

TEARFUL. adj. [tear and full.] Weeping; full of tears.

Is 't meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad, With tearful eyes add water to the sea? Shaks.

To clear the cloudy front of wrinkled care, And dry the tearful sluices of despair; Chann'd forth that virtuous draught the exalted mind

All sense of woe delivers to the wind. Pope, Odys.

TEARLESS.* adj. [tear and less.] Without tears.

They look on with tearless eyes. Sandys, Ps. 106.

Why weep ye now? ye saw with tearless eye When your fleet perish'd on the Punick wave. Shenstone, El. 19.

To TEASE.† v. a. [tæʒən, Saxon.]

1. To comb or unravel wool or flax.

Coarse complexions,
And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to tease the huswife's wool.
Milton, Comus.

2. To scratch cloth in order to level the nap.

3. To torment with importunity; to vex with assiduous impertinence.

Not by the force of carnal reason,
But indefatigable teasing. Buller.
My friends always tease me about him, because he has no estate. Spectator.
After having been present in public debates, he was teased by his mother to inform her of what he passed. Addison.
We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain;
And with remarks and comments tease ye,
In case the thing before was easy. Prior.

TEASEL. n. s. [tæʃl, Sax. dipsacus, Lat.]
A plant.
The species are three: one is called carduus fullonum, and is of singular use in raising the nap upon woollen cloth.
Miller.

TEASELER.* n. s. [from teasel; teizeler, Norm. Fr.] One who raises the nap on woollen cloth by means of the teasel.
Kelham.

TEASER.† n. s. [from tease.] Whoever or whatever torments by incessant importunity.

These teasers, rather to rouse than pinch the game, only made Whittaker find his spirits.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 60.
A fly buzzing at his ear, makes him deaf to the best advice. If you would have him come to himself, you must take off his little teaser, which holds his reason at bay. Collier.

TEAT.† n. s. [teth, Welsh; tit, Saxon;
tette, Dutch; teton, French. Dr. Johnson.
—Germ. titte, ditte; Heb. dad;
M. Goth. daddian, lactare: vox antiquissima. See Wachter and Serenius.]
A dug; a pap.

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny.

Shakspeare.
Snows cause a fruitful year, watering the earth better than rain; in the hour sucks it as out of the teat. Bacon.

When we perceive that bats have teats, we infer,
that they suckle their younglings with milk.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

It more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even.

Milton, P. L.
Locke.

Infants sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat.
The goat, how bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthea, reach'd her teat distent
With milk, thy early food. Prior.

TECHILY. adv. [from techy.] Peevishly;
fretfully; frowardly.

TECHINESS.† n. s. [from techy.] Peevishness; fretfulness.

Age is not a more common plea than unjust:
The young man pretends it for his wanton and inordinate lust; the old, for his grippleness, techin- ness, loquacity: all wrongfully, and not without foul abuse. Bp. Hall, Tempt. Repeal, iii. § 10.

TECHNICAL. adj. [τεχνικός; technique,
French.] Belonging to arts; not in common or popular use.

In technical words, or terms of art, they refrain not from calling the same substance sometimes the sulphur, and sometimes the mercury of a body.

Locke.
TECHNICALLY.* adv. [from technical.] In a technical manner.

The first professed English satirist, to speak technically, is bishop Joseph Hall.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iv. 2.
TECHNOLOGY.* n. s. [τεχνη and λογος, Gr.]
A description or discourse upon arts.

There were not any further essays made in technology for above fourscore years; but all men acquired in the common grammar.

Twells, Exam. of Gramm. (1683,) Pref. p. 17.

TECHY.† adj. [for touchy, that is, inclination to be touched with whatever is said or done. Ray. Often written techy; which see.] Peevish; fretful; irritable; easily made angry; froward.

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he is as techy to be woo'd to woo,
As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit.

Shakspeare.
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple, and felt it bitter, pretty fool, to see it techy, and fall out with the dug. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

TECTO-NICK. adj. [τεκτονικός.] Pertaining to building. Bailey.

To TED.† v. a. [Perhaps from the Icel.
tae (tadi, tad), explicare, dissolve; which comes near the idea of tedding hay.
Dr. Jamieson. From tudda, Su. Goth. intricare. Craven Dialect.] To spread abroad new-mown grass, in order to make it into hay.

The smell of grain, or tedded grass or kine,
Or dairy, each rural sight, each rural sound.

Milton, P. L.
Hay-makers following the mowers, and casting it abroad, they call tedding. Mortimer.

Prudent his fall'n heaps Collecting, cherish'd with the tepid wreaths
Of tedded grass, and the sun's mellowing beams,
Rivall'd with artful heats. Philips.

TEDDER, or TE'THER. n. s. [tudder,
Dutch; tiudt, a rope, Icelandick.]

1. A rope with which a horse is tied in the field that he may not pasture too wide.
[teigher, Erse.]

2. Any thing by which one is restrained.

We live joyfully, going abroad within our tedder.

Bacon.
We shall have them against the wall; we know the length of their tedder, they cannot run far from us. Child.

To TED'DER.* v. a. [from the noun.]
To tie up; to restrain.

Though it is not required that we should be always teddered to a formal solemn praying; yet by our mental meditations, and our ejaculatory emissions of the heart and mind, we may go far to the completing the Apostle's counsel.

Fellham, Res. ii. 55.

TE DEUM. n. s. An hymn of the church, so called from the two first words of the Latin.

The choir,
With all the choicest musick of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. Shaks. Hen. VIII.
Te Deum was sung at Saint Paul's after the victory. Bacon.

TEDIOUS. adj. [tedieux, Fr. tædium,
Latin.]

1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.

The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton, P. L.

Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious sight of woes decays. Dryden.
2. Wearisome by prolixity. Used of authours or performances.

They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in nowise injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that labour which they are not willing to endure. Hooker.

That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words. Acts, xxiv. 4.

Chief mastery to dissect
With long and tedious havock fabled knights.
Milton, P. L.

3. Slow.
But then the road was smooth and fair to see,
With such insensible declivity,
That what men thought a tedious course to run,
Was finish'd in the hour it first begun. Harte.

TE'DIOUSLY.† adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner as to weary.

Why dost thou wrong
Our mutual love so much, and tediously prolong
Our mirthful marriage-hour?

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

TE'DIOUSNESS. n. s. [from tedious.]
1. Wearisomeness by continuance.

She distastes them all within a while;
And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Davies.

2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.
In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.

3. Prolixity; length.
Since brevity's the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

4. Uneasiness; tiresomeness; quality of wearying.

In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often,
to interrupt them; which tediousness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss
when our union with God is complete. Hooker.

More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life. Donne.

To TEEM.† v. n. [tēman, Saxon; to pro-create; team, offspring.]

1. To bring young.
If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.

Shakspeare.

2. To be pregnant; to engender young.
Have we more sons? or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age?

Shakspeare.

When the rising spring adorns the mead,
Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryd.

There are fundamental truths the basis upon which a great many others rest: these are teeming truths, rich in store, with which they furnish the mind, and, like the lights of heaven, give light and evidence to other things. Locke.

3. To be full; to be charged as a breeding animal.

We live in a nation where there is scarce a single head that does not teem with politics. Addison.

To TEEM.† v. a.
1. To bring forth; to produce.

What's the newest grief?
Each minute teems a new one. Shaks. Macbeth.
Common mother, thou
Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,
Teems and feeds all. Shakspeare, Timon.

The earth obey'd; and straight
Opening her fertile womb, teen'd at a birth
Innumerable living creatures. Milton, P. L.

The deluge wrought such a change, that the earth did not then teem forth its increase, as formerly of its own accord, but required culture.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. To pour. A low word, imagined by Skinner to come from tommen, Danish, to draw out; to pour. The Scots retain it: as, teem that water out; hence Swift took this word. Dr. Johnson.—What
Dr. Johnson has here said, is not accurate.
This sense of teem is not only still retained in our northern parts of England, but is very old in our language.
“The teming or broaching of a vessel,
depletion.” Prompt. Parv. Serenius refers it to the Icel. taema, to empty.

Teem out the remainder of the ale into the tankard,
and fill the glass with small beer.

Swift, Direct. to the Butler.

TEEMER. n. s. [from teem.] One that brings young.

TEEMFUL. adj. [teamful, Saxon.]

1. Pregnant; prolific.

2. Brimful. Ainsworth.

TEEMLESS. adj. [from teem.] Unfruitful;
not prolific.

Such wars, such waste, such fiery tracks of death,
Their zeal has left, and such a teemless earth.

Dryden.

TEEN.† n. s. [tanan, Saxon, to kindle;
tenen, Flemish, to vex; teonan, Saxon,
injuries.] Sorrow; grief. Not in use,
Dr. Johnson says; yet it is still a northern word both for sorrow, and for injury or harm.

Arrived there

That barehead knight, for dread and doleful teen
Would fain have fled, ne durst approach near.

Spenser.

Fry not in heartless grief and doleful teen.

Spenser.

My heart bleeds

To think o' the teen that I have turn'd to you.

Shakespeare.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.

Shakespeare.

Cold winter's storms and wreakful teene.

W. Browne.

TO TEEN.† v. a. [from tanan, to kindle,
Sax.] To excite; to provoke to do a thing. Not in use.

Why tempt ye me, and teene, with such manner
speche? Chaucer, Test. of Love.

Religious reverence doth buriall teene.

Which whoso wants, wants so much of his rest.

Spenser, F. Q.

TEENS. n. s. [from teen for ten.] The
years reckoned by the termination teen;
as, thirteen, fourteen.

Our author would excuse these youthful scenes,
Begotten at his entrance, in his teens;
Some childish fancies may approve the toy,
Some like the muse the more for being a boy.

Granville.

TEETH, the plural of tooth.

Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth
are terrible round about. Job, xli. 14.

TO TEETH. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed teeth; to be at the time of dentition.

When the symptoms of teething appear, the gums
ought to be relaxed by softening ointment.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

TEGUMENT. n. s. [tegumentum, Latin.]
Cover; the outward part. This word is seldom used but in anatomy or phys-icks.

Clip and trim those tender strins in the fashion of beard, or other hairy teguments.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Proceed by section, dividing the skin, and separating the teguments.

Wiseman, Surgery.

In the nutmeg another tegument is the mace

between the green pericarpium and the hard shell.

Ray on the Creation.

TEHE'E.* interjection. This is an old expression for a laugh. It is also used in Scotland; and Dr. Jamieson considers it as either derived from the sound, or as allied to hia, Su. Goth. and Icel. to sport, to laugh.

Te-he, quoth she, and clapt the window to.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

Gen. xxiv. 39.

Thy message might in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton, P. L.

2. To relate; to rehearse.

I will declare what wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid. Job, xlv. 18.

When Gideon heard the telling of the dream,
and the interpretation, he worshipped.

Judges, vii. 13.

He longer will delay to hear thee tell

His generation. Milton, P. L.

You must know; but break, O break my heart,
Before I tell my fatal story out,

Th' usurper of my throne is my wife! Dryden.

The rest are vanish'd, none repass'd the gate,

And not a man appears to tell their fate.

Pope, Odyssey.

3. To teach; to inform.

He gently ask'd where all the people be,
Which in that stately building wont to dwell,
Who answer'd him full soft, he could not tell.

Spenser.

I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Tell me now, what lady is the same,
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promis'd to tell me of. Shaks.

The fourth part of a shekel of silver will I give to the man of God to tell us our way.

1 Sam. ix. 8.

Saint Paul telleth us, we must needs be subject not only for fear, but also for conscience sake.

Sanderson.

Tell me how may I know him, how adore.

Milton, P. L.

4. To discover; to betray.

They will tell it to the inhabitants.

Num. xiv. 14.

5. To count; to number.

Here lies the learned Savile's heir,
So early wise, and lasting fair;
That none, except her years they told,
Thought her a child, or thought her old. Waller.
Numerous sails the fearful only tell;
Courage from hearts, and not from numbers grows.

Dryden.

A child can tell twenty before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

She doubts if two and two make four,
Though she has told them ten times o'er. Prior.

6. To make excuses. A low word.

Tush, never tell me, I take it much unkindly,
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse,
As if the strings were thine, should'st know of this.

Shakespeare.

TO TELL. v. n.

1. To give an account; to make report.

I will compass thine altar, O Lord, that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works. Ps. xxi. 7.

Ye that live and move, fair creatures! tell,
Tell, if ye saw, how came I thus, how here?

Milton, P. L.

2. To TELL on. To inform of. A doubtful phrase.

David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, Lest they should tell on us, saying, So did David. 1 Sam. xxvii. 11.

TELLER.† n. s. [from tell.]

1. One who tells or relates.

The nature of bad news infects the teller.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. One who numbers; a numberer.

3. A teller is an officer of the exchequer, of which there are four in number: their business is to receive all monies due to the king, and give the clerk of the pelf a bill to charge him therewith: they also pay all persons any money payable to them by the king, by warrant from the auditor of the receipt: they also make books of receipts and payments, which they deliver to the lord treasurer. Cowell.

TELLTALE. n. s. [tell and tale.] One who gives malicious information; one who carries officious intelligence.

You speak to Casca, and to such a man

That is no fearing telltale. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

What, shall these papers lie like telltales here?

Shakespeare.

A telltale out of school

Is of all wits the greatest fool. Swift.

TELLTALE.* adj. Blabbing; telling tales; giving malicious information.

Let not the heavens hear these telltale women

Rail on the Lord's anointed. Shakespeare.

'Tis done; report displays her telltale wings,

And to each ear the news and tidings brings.

Fairfax.

And to the telltale sun decry

Our conceal'd solemnity.

Milton, Comus.

Eurydice and he are prisoners here,

But will not long be so: this telltale ghost

Perhaps will clear them both. Dryden and Lee.

TEMERARIOUS. adj. [teméraire, Fr. temerarius, Latin.]

1. Rash; heady; unreasonably adventurous; unreasonably contemptuous of danger.

Resolution without foresight is but a temerarious folly; and the consequences of things are the first point to be taken into consideration.

L' Estrange.

2. Careless; heedless; done at random.

Should he find upon one single sheet of parchment, an oration written full of profound sense, adorned with elegant phrase, the wit of man could not persuade him that this was done by the temerarious dashes of an unguided pen.

Ray.

TEMERARIOUSLY.* adv. [from temerarius.] Rashly; with unreasonable contempt of danger; without heed.

The greatest mistake, of all others, was to publish such a notorious untruth to the world so temerarioously, without better advice.

Bp. Bramhall, Ch. of Eng. Def. ch. 2.

I have ventured, perhaps too temerarioously, to contribute my mite to the learned world.

Swift, Antiq. of the Eng. Tongue.

TEMERITY.† n. s. [temerité, old French; temeritas, Lat.] Rashness; unreasonable contempt of danger,

Without suspicion of temerity.

More, Infin. of Worlds, (1647), st. 61.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.

To TEMPER. v. a. [tempero, Latin; temperer, Fr.]

VOL. III.

1. To mix so as that one part qualifies the other.

I shall temper so
Justice with mercy, as may illustrate most
Them fully satisfy'd, and These appease.

Milton, P. L.

2. To compound; to form by mixture; to qualify as an ingredient.

If you could find out but a man

To bear a poison, I would temper it;

That Romeo should upon receipt thereof

Soon sleep in quiet. Shakespeare.

3. To mingle.

Prepare the sixth part of an ephah and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour.

Ezek. xlvi. 14.

The good old knight, with a mixture of the father and master of the family, tempered the inquiries after his own affairs with kind questions relating to themselves. Addison.

4. To beat together to a proper consistence.

Th' uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,

And temper clay with blood of Englishmen.

Shakespeare.

The potter tempering soft earth, fashioneth every vessel with much labour.

Wisd. xv. 7.

5. To accommodate; to modify.

Thy sustenance serving to the appetite of the eater, tempered itself to every man's liking.

Wisd. xvi. 21.

6. To bring to due proportion; to moderate excess.

These soft fires with kindly heat

Of various influence foment and warm,

Temper or nourish.

Milton, P. L.

7. To soften; to mollify; to assuage; to soothe; to calm.

Solon, in his laws to the Athenians, laboured to temper their warlike courages with sweet delights of learning and sciences: so that as much as the one excelled in arms, the other excelled in knowledge.

With this she wants to temper angry Jove,

When all the gods he threatens with thundering darts.

Spenser.

Now will I to that old Andronicus,

And temper him with all the art I have.

Woman! Nature made thee

To temper man: we had been brutes without you.

Otway.

8. To form metals to a proper degree of hardness.

The sword

Of Michael from the armoury of God

Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen

Nor solid might resist that edge. Milton, P. L.

In the tempering of steel, by holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser in the other competent heat, gives it very differing tempers as to brittleness or toughness.

Boyle.

Repeated peals they hear,

And, in a heav'n serene, refulgent arms appear;

Red'ning the skies, and glitt'ring all around,

The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound.

Dryden.

9. To govern. A Latinism.

With which the damned ghosts he governeth,

And furies rules, and Tartare tempereth. Spenser.

TEMPER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Due mixture of contrary qualities.

Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil and temper than the abundant growing of the palm trees.

Raleigh.

Health itself is but a kind of temper, gotten and preserved by a convenient mixture of contrarieties.

Arbutnot.

2. Middle course; mean or medium.

If the estates of some bishops were exorbitant
before the reformation, the present clergy's wishes

reach no further than that some reasonable temper had been used instead of paring them so quick.

Swift, Miscell.

3. Constitution of body.

This body would be increased daily, being supplied from above and below, and having done growing, it would become more dry by degrees, and of a temper of greater consistency and firmness.

Burnet, Theory.

4. Disposition of mind.

This, I shall call it evangelical, temper is far from being natural to any corrupt child of Adam.

Hammond.

Remember with what mild

And gracious temper he both heard and judg'd;

Without wrath or reviling. Milton, P. L.

This will keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations.

Locke on Education.

All irregular tempers in trade and business, are but like irregular tempers in eating and drinking.

Lavo.

5. Constitutional frame of mind.

The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Our hearts,

Of brothers temper, do receive you in

With all kind love. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

6. Calmness of mind; moderation.

Restore yourselves unto your tempers, fathers,

And without perturbation hear me speak.

B. Jonson.

Teach me, like thee, in various nature wise,

To fall with dignity, with temper rise. Pope.

7. State to which metals are reduced, particularly as to hardness.

Here draw I

A sword, whose temper I intend to stain

With the best blood that I can meet withal. Shaks.

Thuriel with his spear

Touch'd lightly; for no falsehood can endure

Touch of celestial temper, but returns

Of force to its own likeness: up he starts,

These needles should have a due temper; for if they are too soft, the force exerted to carry them through the flesh will bend them; if they are too brittle, they snap. Sharp.

TEMPERAMENT. n. s. [temperamentum, Lat. temperament, Fr.]

1. Constitution; state with respect to the predominance of any quality.

Bodies are denominated hot and cold in proportion to the present temperament of that part of our body to which they are applied. Locke.

2. Medium; due mixture of opposites.

The common law has wasted and wrought out those distempers, and reduced the kingdom to its just state and temperament. Hale.

TEMPERAMENTAL. adj. [from temperament.] Constitutional.

That temperamental dignitions, and conjecture of prevalent humours that may be collected from spots in our nails, we concede. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Intellectual representations are received with as unequal a fate upon a bare temperamental relish or distust. Glanville.

TEMPERANCE. n. s. [temperantia, Lat.]

1. Moderation; opposed to gluttony and drunkenness.

Observe

The rule of not too much; by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence

Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight.

Milton, P. L.

Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fur-ture without envy, gives indolence of body and tranquillity of mind; the best guardian of youth and support of old age. Temple.

5 F

The earth obey'd; and straight
Opening her fertile womb, teem'd at a birth
Innumerable living creatures. Milton, P. L.

The deluge wrought such a change, that the
earth did not then teem forth its increase, as formerly
of its own accord, but required culture.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. To pour. A low word, imagined by Skinner to come from tommen, Danish,
to draw out; to pour. The Scots retain
it: as, teem that water out; hence Swift took this word. Dr. Johnson.—What
Dr. Johnson has here said, is not accurate.
This sense of teem is not only still retained in our northern parts of England, but is very old in our language.
“The teming or broaching of a vessel, depletio.” Prompt. Parv. Serenius refers it to the Icel. taema, to empty.

Teem out the remainder of the ale into the tankard, and fill the glass with small beer.

Swift, Direct. to the Butler.

TEEMER. n. s. [from teem.] One that brings young.

TE'EMFUL. adj. [teampful, Saxon.]

1. Pregnant; prolific.

2. Brimful.

Ainsworth.

TE'EMLESS. adj. [from teem.] Unfruitful;
not prolific.

Such wars, such waste, such fiery tracks of death,
Their zeal has left, and such a teemless earth.

Dryden.

TEEN.† n. s. [tīnan, Saxon, to kindle;
tenen, Flemish, to vex; teonan, Saxon,
injuries.] Sorrow; grief. Not in use,
Dr. Johnson says; yet it is still a northern word both for sorrow, and for injury
or harm.

Arrived there

That barehead knight, for dread and doleful teen
Would fain have fled, ne durst approach near.

Spenser.

Fry not in heartless grief and doleful teen.

1

Spenser.

My heart bleeds

To think o' the teen that I have turn'd to you.

Shakespeare.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.

Shakespeare.

Cold winter's storms and wreakful teene.

W. Browne.

To TEEN.† v. a. [from tīnan, to kindle,
Sax.] To excite; to provoke to do a thing. Not in use.

Why tempt ye me, and tene, with such manner
speche? Chaucer, Test. of Love.

Religious reverence doth burial teene,
Which whose wants, wants so much of his rest.

Spenser, F. Q.

TEENS. n. s. [from teen for ten.] The
years reckoned by the termination teen;
as, thirteen, fourteen.

Our author would excuse these youthful scenes,
Begotten at his entrance, in his teens;
Some childish fancies may approve the toy,
Some like the muse the more for being a boy.

Granville.

TEETH, the plural of tooth.

Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth
are terrible round about. Job, xli. 14.

To TEETH. v. n. [from the tooth.] To breed teeth; to be at the time of dentition.

When the symptoms of teething appear, the gums
ought to be relaxed by softening ointment.

Arbutnot on Diet.

TEGUMENT. n. s. [tegumentum, Latin.]
Cover; the outward part. This word is seldom used but in anatomy or phys-
icks.

Clip and trim those tender strings in the fashion
of beard, or other hairy teguments.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Proceed by section, dividing the skin, and separating the teguments. Wise man, Surgery.

In the nutmeg another tegument is the mace
between the green pericarpium and the hard shell.

Ray on the Creation.

TEHE'E.* interjection. This is an old expression for a laugh. It is also used in Scotland; and Dr. Jamieson considers it as either derived from the sound, or
as allied to hia, Su. Goth. and Icel. to
sport, to laugh.

Te-he, quoth she, and clapt the window to.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

To TE'HEE. v. n. To laugh with a loud and more insolent kind of cachinnation;
to titter.

They laugh'd and te-hee'd with derision,

To see them take your disposition. Hudibras.

TELL.† n. s. [tīlia, Lat.] The same with linden or lime tree.

A telltree and an oak have their substance in them when they cast their leaves. Isa. vi. 13.

From purple violets and the tell they bring
Their gather'd sweets, and rifle all the spring.

Addison, Virg. Georg. 4.

TEINT. n. s. [teinte, Fr.] Colour; touch of the pencil.

Glaz'd colours have a vivacity which can never be imitated by the most brilliant colours, because the different teints are simply laid on, each in its place, one after another. Dryden.

TELARY. adj. [tela, a web, Latin.] Spinning webs.

The pictures of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the center. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TELEGRAPH.* n. s. [telegraphie, French; from τελος and γραφω, Greek.] An instrument that answers the end of writing by conveying intelligence to a distance through the means of signals. Mason.

TELESCOPE.† n. s. [telescope, French;
from τῆλε, far, and σκοπεω, to view.
Our word is not old in the language.
In 1655, it is placed in Bagwell's Mystery of Astronomy among words requiring explanation.] A long glass by which 14

TELESMA'TICAL.* adj. [from telesm.] Belonging to telesms.

They had a telesmatical way of preparation, answerable to the beginnings and mediocrity of the art. Gregory, Notes on Script. p. 41.

There was brought into Aleppo a little copper vessel, out of a strong imagination that it was endued with a telesmatical virtue to draw there-unto a sort of birds which feed on locusts.

Ricaut, State of the Gr. Ch. p. 376.

TELESTICK.* n. s. [from τελος and στυκος, Greek.] A poem, where the final letters of each line make up a name.

Mason.

Acrosticks and telessticks on jump names.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

To TELL. v. a. preterite and part. pass.

1. To mix so as that one part qualifies the other.

I shall temper so

Justice with mercy, as may illustrate most

Them fully satisfy'd, and Thee appease.

Milton, P. L.

2. To compound; to form by mixture; to qualify as an ingredient.

If you could find out but a man

To bear a poison, I would temper it;

That Romeo should upon receipt thereof

Soon sleep in quiet. Shakespeare.

3. To mingle.

Prepare the sixth part of an ephah and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour.

Ezek. xlv. 14.

The good old knight, with a mixture of the father and master of the family, tempered the inquiries after his own affairs with kind questions relating to themselves.

Addison.

4. To beat together to a proper consistence.

Th' uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,

And temper clay with blood of Englishmen.

Shakespeare.

The potter tempering soft earth, fashioneth every vessel with much labour.

Wisdom, xv. 7.

5. To accommodate; to modify.

Thy sustenance serving to the appetite of the eater,

tempered itself to every man's liking.

Wisdom, xvi. 21.

6. To bring to due proportion; to moderate excess.

These soft fires with kindly heat

Of various influence foment and warm,

Temper or nourish. Milton, P. L.

7. To soften; to mollify; to assuage; to soothe; to calm.

Solon, in his laws to the Athenians, laboured to temper their warlike courages with sweet delights of learning and sciences: so that as much as the one excelled in arms, the other exceeded in knowledge.

Spenser on Ireland.

With this she wants to temper angry Jove,

When all the gods he threatens with thundering dart.

Spenser.

Now will I to that old Andronicus,

And temper him with all the art I have. Shaks.

Woman! Nature made thee

To temper man: we had been brutes without you.

Ottaway.

8. To form metals to a proper degree of hardness.

The sword

Of Michael from the armoury of God

Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen

Nor solid might resist that edge. Milton, P. L.

In the tempering of steel, by holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser in the other competent heat, gives it very differing tempers as to brittleness or toughness.

Boyle.

Repeated peals they hear,

And, in a heav'n serene, refulgent arms appear;

Red ning the skies, and glitt'ring all around,

The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound.

Dryden.

9. To govern. A Latinism.

With which the damned ghosts he governeth,

And furies rules, and Tartare tempereth. Spenser.

TEMPER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Due mixture of contrary qualities.

Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil and temper than the abundant growing of the palm trees.

Raleigh.

Health itself is but a kind of temper, gotten and preserved by a convenient mixture of contraries.

Arbutnot.

2. Middle course; mean or medium.

If the estates of some bishops were exorbitant

before the reformation, the present clergy's wishes

reach no further than that some reasonable temper had been used instead of paring them so quick.

Swift, Miscell.

3. Constitution of body.

This body would be increased daily, being supplied from above and below, and having done growing, it would become more dry by degrees, and of a temper of greater consistency and firmness.

Burnet, Theory.

4. Disposition of mind.

This, I shall call it evangelical, temper is far from being natural to any corrupt child of Adam.

Hammond.

Remember with what mild

And gracious temper he both heard and judg'd,

Without wrath or reviling. Milton, P. L.

This will keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations.

Locke on Education.

All irregular tempers in trade and business, are but like irregular tempers in eating and drinking.

Law.

5. Constitutional frame of mind.

The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Our hearts,

Of brothers temper, do receive you in

With all kind love. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

6. Calmness of mind; moderation.

Restore yourselves unto your tempers, fathers,

And without perturbation hear me speak.

B. Jonson.

Teach me, like thee, in various nature wise,

To fall with dignity, with temper rise. Pope.

7. State to which metals are reduced, particularly as to hardness.

Here draw I

A sword, whose temper I intend to stain

With the best blood that I can meet withal. Shaks.

Ituriel with his spear

Touch'd lightly; for no falsehood can endure

Touch of celestial temper, but returns

Of force to its own likeness: up he starts,

These needles should have a due temper; for if they are too soft, the force exerted to carry them through the flesh will bend them; if they are too brittle, they snap.

Sharp.

TEMPERAMENT. n. s. [temperamentum, Lat. temperament, Fr.]

1. Constitution; state with respect to the predominance of any quality.

Bodies are denominated hot and cold in proportion to the present temperament of that part of our body to which they are applied.

Locke.

2. Medium; due mixture of opposites.

The common law has wasted and wrought out those distempers, and reduced the kingdom to its just state and temperament.

Hale.

TEMPERAMENTAL. adj. [from temperament.] Constitutional.

That temperamental dignitions, and conjecture of prevalent humours that may be collected from spots in our nails, we concede. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Intellectual representations are received with as unequal a fate upon a bare temperamental relish or disgust.

Glauville.

TEMPERANCE. n. s. [temperantia, Lat.]

1. Moderation; opposed to gluttony and drunkenness.

Observe

The rule of not too much; by temperance taught

In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from

thence

Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight.

Milton, P. L.

Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fortune without envy, gives indolence of body and tranquillity of mind; the best guardian of youth and support of old age.

Temple.

5 F

Make temperance thy companion; so shall health
Sit on thy brow. Dodsley, Agriculture.

2. Patience; calmness; sedateness; moderation; passion.

His senseless speech and doted ignorance,
When, as the noble prince had marked well,
He calm'd his wrath with goodly temperance.
Spenser.

What, are you chaf'd?

Ask God for temperance, that's the appliance only
Which your disease requires. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

TE'MPERATE. adj. [temperatus, Lat.]

1. Not excessive; moderate in degree of any quality.

Use a temperate heat, for they are ever temperate heats that digest and mature; wherein we mean temperate, according to the nature of the subject; for that may be temperate to fruits and liquors which will not work at all upon metals. Bacon.

His sleep

Was airy, light, from pure digestion bred,
And temperate vapours bland. Milton, P. L.

2. Advised in meat and drink.

I advised him to be temperate in eating and drinking. Wiseman.

3. Free from ardent passion.

So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperate order in so fierce a course,
Doth want example. Shakespeare.

She's not forward, but modest as the dove:
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shaks.
From temperate inactivity we are unready to put in execution the suggestions of reason.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

TE'MPERATELY. adv. [from temperate.]

By winds that temperately blow
The bark should pass secure and slow. Addison.

2. Calmly; without violence of passion.

Temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakespeare.

3. Without gluttony or luxury.

God esteems it a part of his service if we eat or drink; so it be temperately, and as may best preserve health. Bp. Taylor.

TE'MPERATENESS. n. s. [from temperate.]

1. Freedom from excesses; mediocrity.

2. Calmness; coolness of mind.

Langley's mild temperateness
Did tend unto a calmer quietness.
Daniel, Civ. War.

TE'MPERATIVE.* adj. [from temperate.]
Having power to temper.

Living creatures are not only fed by the root of the stomach, but by the air drawn in and sent forth by the breath, which is temperative of the heart's heat, nutritive of the animal and vital spirits, and purgative of unnatural vapours.

Granger on Eccl. (1621), p. 15.

TE'MPERATURE. n. s. [temperatura, temper- pero, Lat. temperature, Fr.]

1. Constitution of nature; degree of any qualities.

It lieth in the same climate, and is of no other temperature than Guinea. Abbot, Descr. of the World.

Birds that change countries at certain seasons,
if they come earlier, shew the temperature of weather.
Bacon.

There may be as much difference as to the temper- ature of the air, and as to heat and cold in one mile, as in ten degrees of latitude; and he that would cool and refresh himself in the summer, had better go up to the top of the next hill, than remove into a far more northern country. Brown, Trav.

Memory depends upon the consistence and the temperature of the brain. Watts.

2. Mediocrity; due balance of contraries.

As the world's sun doth effects beget
Different, in divers places every day;
Here autumn's temperature, there summer's heat,
Here flowery spring-tide, and there winter gray.
Davies.

If, instead of this variation of heat, we suppose an equality, or constant temperature of it before the deluge, the case would be much altered.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Moderation; freedom from predominant passion.

In that proud port which her so goodly graceth,
Most goodly temperature you may descry.
Spenser.

TE'MPERED. adj. [from temper.] Disposed with regard to the passions.

When was my lord so much ungently tempered,
To stop his ears against admonishment? Shaks.

TE'MPEST. n. s. [tempeste, Fr. tempestas,
Lat.]

1. The utmost violence of the wind: the names by which the wind is called according to the gradual increase of its force seem to be, a breeze; a gale; a gust; a storm; a tempest.

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.
Some have been driven by tempests to the south.
Abbot.

What at first was call'd a gust, the same
Hath now a storm's, anon a tempest's name. Donne.
[We,] caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hur'd
Each on his rock transfix'd. Milton, P. L.

With clouds and storms
Around thee thrown, tempest o'er tempest roll'd,
Thou humblest nature with thy northern blast.
Thomson.

2. Any tumult; commotion; perturbation.

The tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else, Save what beats there. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

this drunken god [Bacchus]. Feltham, Res. i. 8.

TE'MPLER. n. s. A piece of timber in building.

When you lay any timber on brick-work, lintels over windows, or templets under girdle lay them in loom. Moxon, Mech. A.

TE'MPORAL. adj. [temporal, Fr. temporalis, low Lat.]

1. Measured by time; not eternal.

As there they sustain temporal life, so here they would learn to make provision for eternal.
Hosk.

2. Secular; not ecclesiastical.

This scripture shews the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread of kings. Shaks.
All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,
Would they strip from us. Shaks. Hen. V.
All temporal power hath been wrested from the clergy, and much of their ecclesiastick. Swift.

3. Not spiritual.

There is scarce any of those decisions but gives good light, by way of authority or reason, to some questions that arise also between temporal dignities, especially to cases wherein some of our subordinate temporal titles have part in the controversy. Selden.

Call not every temporal end a defiling of the intention, but only when it contradicts the ends of God, or when it is principally intended: for sometimes a temporal end is part of our duty; and such are all the actions of our calling. Bp. Taylor.

Prayer is the instrument of fetching down all good things to us, whether spiritual or temporal.
Wh. Duty of Man.

Our petitions to God with regard to temporals, must be that medium of convenience proportioned to the several conditions of life. Rogers, Serm.

4. [Temporal, Fr.] Placed at the temples, or upper part of the sides of the head.

Copious bleeding, by opening the temporal arteries, are the most effectual remedies for a phrensy. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

TEMPORALITY. n. s. [temporalité, Fr.]
TEMPORALS. } from temporal.] Secular possessions; not ecclesiastick rights.

Such revenues, lands, and tenements, as bishops have had annexed to their sees by the kings and others from time to time, as they are barons and lords of the parliament. Cowel.

The residue of these ordinary finances is casual,
as the temporalities of vacant bishopricks, the profits that grow by the tenures of lands. Bacon.

The king yielded up the point, reserving the ceremony of homage from the bishops, in respect of the temporalities, to himself. Ayliffe.

TEMPORALLY. adv. [from temporal.] With respect to this life.

Sinners who are in such a temporally happy condition, owe it not to their sins, but wholly to their luck. South.

TEMPORALNESS. n. s. [from temporal.]
Secularity; worldliness.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.
TEMPORALTY. n. s. [from temporal.]

1. The laity; secular people.

The state of being temporary; not perpetuity.

TEMPORARY. adj. [tempus, Lat.] Lasting only for a limited time.

These temporary truces were soon made and soon broken; he desired a straiter amity.

Bacon, Hen. VII.
If the Lord's immediate speaking, uttering, and writing, doth conclude by a necessary inference, that all precepts uttered and written in this manner are simply and perpetually moral; then, on the contrary, all precepts wanting this are merely temporary. White.

The republic, threatened with danger, appointed a temporary dictator, who, when the danger was over, retired again into the community.

TEMPORISATION. n. s. [from temporize.]
The act of complying with times or occasions.

Charges of temporization and compliance had somewhat sullied his reputation.

Johnson, Life of Ascham.
To TEMPORIZE. v. n. [temporiser, Fr.]
tempus, Latin.]

1. To delay; to procrastinate.

If Cupid hath not spent all his quiver in Venice,
thou wilt quake for this shortly.

— I look for an earthquake too then.

— Well, you will temporize with the hours.

Shakespeare.
The earl of Lincoln, deceived of the country's concourse, in which case he would have temporized, resolved to give the king battle. Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To comply with the times or occasions.

They might their grievance inwardly complain,
But outwardly they needs must temporize. Daniel.

3. To comply. This is improper.

The dauphin is too wilful opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties:
He flatly says, he'll not lay down his arms.

Shakespeare.
TEMPORIZER. † n. s. [temporiseur, French, from temporize.] One that complies with times or occasions; a trimmer.

I pronounce thee a hovering temporizer, that Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil, Inclining to them both. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Like so many weathercocks they turn round, a rout of temporizers, ready to maintain all that is or shall be proposed, in hope of preferment!

Burton, Anat. of Med. Pref.

TEMSE. n. s. [tems, Dutch, a sieve. See TEMSE BREAD.] A sieve. Still a northern word. It is in our old lexicography. Sometimes written tems, and tempe.

made of flour better sifted than common.

To TEMPT. † v. a. [tento, Lat. tenter,
French.]

1. To solicit to ill; to incite by presenting some pleasure or advantage to the mind; to entice.

'Tis not the king that sends you to the Tower,
My lady Gray tempts him to this harsh extremity.

Shakespeare.
You ever gentle gods, take my breath from me;
Let not my worsor spirit tempt me again

To die before you please. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Come together, that Satan tempt you not.

1 Cor. vii. 5.
He that hath not wholly subdued himself, is quickly tempted and overcome in small things.

Bp. Taylor.
Fix'd on the fruit she gaz'd, which to behold Might tempt alone. Milton, P. L.

The devil can but tempt and deceive; and if he cannot destroy so, his power is at an end. South.

O wretched maid!
Whose roving fancy would resolve the same
With him, who next should tempt her easy fame.

Prior.

2. To provoke.

I'm much too venturesome
In tempting of your patience. Shaks. Hen. VIII.
Withhold

Your talons from the wretched and the bold;
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair:
For, though your violence should leave 'em bare
Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain.

Dryden.
3. It is sometimes used without any notion of evil; to solicit; to draw.

Still his strength conceal'd
Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall.

Milton, P. L.
The rowing crew,
To tempt a fare, clothe all their tilts in blue. Gay.

4. To try; to attempt; to venture on. I know not whether it was not originally l'attemp, which was viciously written to tempt, by an elision of the wrong syllable.

This from the vulgar branches must be torn,
And to fair Proserpine the present born,
Ere leave be giv'n to tempt the nether skies.

Dryden.

5. To prove; to try.

He stay'd his hand, and gen himself advise
To prove his sense, and tempt her feigned truth.

Spenser, F. Q. i. l. 50.
And it came, to pass after these things, that God did tempt Abraham. Gen. xxii.

TEMPTABLE. adj. [from tempt.] Liable to temptation; obnoxious to bad influence. Not elegant, nor used.

If the parliament were as temptable as any other assembly, the managers must fail for want of tools to work with. Swift.

TEMPTATION. † n. s. [temptacion, old
French; from tempt.]

1. The act of tempting; solicitation to ill; enticement.

All temptation to transgress repel. Milton, P. L.

2. The state of being tempted.

When by human weakness, and the arts of the tempter, you are led into temptations, prayer is the thread to bring you out of this labyrinth. Duguid.

3. That which is offered to the mind as a motive to ill.

Set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary casket; for if the devil be within, and that temptation without, he will chuse it.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Dare to be great without a guilty crown;
View it, and lay the bright temptation down:

'Tis base to seize on all. Dryden, Aureng.

TEMPTATIONLESS.  adj.* [temptation and less.] Having no motive. Not in use.
An empty, profitless, temptationless sin.

Hammond, Works, iv. 513.

TEMPTER. n. s. [from tempt.]

1. One who solicits to ill; an enticer.

These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?
Not she; nor doth she tempt.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
Those who are bent to do wickedly, will never want tempters to urge them on.

Tillotson.
My work is done:
She's now the tempter to ensnare his heart. Dryd.

2. The infernal solicitor to evil.
The experience of our own frailties, and the watchfulness of the tempter, discourage us.

Hammond on Fundamentals.
Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.
To this high mountain's top the tempter brought
Our Saviour. Milton, P. L.

TEMPTINGLY.* adv. [from tempt.] So as to tempt or entice.

These look temptingly.

Peters on Job, p. 451.

TEMPTRESS.* n. s. [from tempter.] She that tempts or entices.

Huloet, and Sherwood.

Be not jealous,

Euphrania; I shall scarcely prove a temptress;

Fall to our dance.

Ford, Broken Heart.

TEMULENCY.† n. s. [temulentia, Lat.] Inebriation; intoxication by liquor.

Bullockar.

TEMULENT. adj. [temulentus, Lat.] Inebriated; intoxicated as with strong liquors.

TEMULENTIVE.* adj. [temulentus, Latin.] Drunken; denoting the state of intoxication.

The drunkard commonly hath a palsied hand; gouty, staggering legs, that fain would go, but cannot; a drawing, stammering, temulentive tongue.

Junius, Sin Stigm. (1639), p. 38.

TEN.† adj. [cyn, Saxon; tien, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — M. Goth. taihun; Icel. tiju: aperto lingu. affin. consensu. Ingeniosè satis Wachterus ab Icel. tyna, legere, enumerare, digitos nempè omnes, quibus sine dubio numerabant veteres. Serenius. To this numeration of the fingers Mr. H. Tooke also adverts; and pronounces ten the past participle of the Sax. týnan, to enclose, to encompass. See Div. of Purl. ii. 201. But the Icel. tyna, to reckon, is the more likely etymon.]

1. The decimal number; twice five; the number by which we multiply numbers into new denominations.

Thou shalt have more

Than two tens to a score.

Shaks. K. Lear.

Ten hath been extolled as containing even, odd, long, and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers; and Aristotle observed, that barbarians as well as Greeks used a numeration unto ten.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

With twice ten sail I cross'd the Phrygian sea, Scarce seven within your harbour meet.

Dryden.

From the soft lyre,

Sweet flute, and ten-string'd instrument, require Sounds of delight.

Prior.

2. Ten is a proverbial number.

There's a proud modesty in merit,

Averse from begging; and resolv'd to pay

Ten times the gift it asks.

Dryden, Cleomenes.

Although English is too little cultivated, yet the faults are nine in ten owing to affectation.

Swift, Miscell.

TENABLE. adj. [tenable, French.] That may be maintained against opposition; that may be held against attacks.

The town was strong of itself, and wanted no industry to fortify and make it tenable.

Bacon, War with Spain.

Sir William Ogle seized upon the castle, and put it into a tenable condition.

Clarendon.

Infidelity has been driven out of all its outworks: the atheist has not found his post tenable, and is therefore retired into deism.

Addison, Spect.

TENACIOUS. adj. [tenax, Lat.]

1. Grasping hard; inclined to hold fast; not willing to let go: with of before the thing held.

A resolute tenacious adherence to well chosen principles, makes the face of a governor shine in the eyes of those that see his actions.

South.

Gripping, and still tenacious of thy hold,

Would'st thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely soul'd,

Should give the prizes they had gain'd? Dryden.

You reign absolute over the hearts of a stubborn and free-born people, tenacious to madness of their liberty.

Dryden.

True love's a miser; so tenacious grown,

He weighs to the least grain of what's his own.

Dryden.

Men are tenacious of the opinions that first possess them.

Locke.

He is tenacious of his own property, and ready to invade that of others.

So spake the grisly terror. Milton, P. L.
Those enormous terrours of the Nile. Prior.

TERRE. adj. [ters, Fr. tersus, Lat.]

1. Smooth. Not in use.

Many stones precious and vulgar, although te and smooth, have not this power attractive. Brown, Vulg. E.

2 Cleanly written; neat; elegant without pomposness.

To raw numbers and unfinished verse,
Sweet sound is added now to make it true. Dryd.
These accomplishments in the pulpit appear by a quaint, terse, florid style, rounded into periods without propriety or meaning. Swift, Miscell.

Various of numbers, new in every strain;
Diffus'd, yet terse, poetical, though plain. Harte.
TERSELY.* adv. [from terse.] Neatly: used ironically by Ben Jonson.

Pastidious Brisk, a courtier, — speaks good remnants; swears terely, and with variety!
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

TERSENESS.* n. s. [from terse.] Smoothness or neatness of style.

Gay wrote with neatness and terseness, but certainly without any elevation.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.
It was usual to write the chapter-acts in Latin; and a certain terseness and elegance of style eminently distinguish those, that were made during his deanship, from any memorials that have been inserted before or since in the register of that cathedral. Warton, Life of Bathurst, p. 214.

They [Ogden's Sermons] display that perfect propriety and purity of English diction, that chastised terseness of composition, which has scarcely been equalled by any writer. Wakefield, Mem. p. 95.

TERTIAN. n. s. [tertiana, Latin.] Is an ague intermitting but one day, so that there are two fits in three days.

Tertians of a long continuance do most menace this symptom. Harvey on Consumptions.

Sir R. Atkyns, Hist. of Gloc. (1712,) p. 778.

TEST.† n. s. [test, Fr. testa, Italian.]

1. The cupel by which refiners try their metals.

Our ingots, tests, and many things mo.

Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.

2. Trial; examination: as by the cupel.

All thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy love, and thou

Hast strangely stood the test. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp't upon it. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

They who thought worst of the Scots, did not think there would be no fruit or discovery from that test. Clarendon.

What use of oaths, of promise, or of test,
Where men regard no God but interest? Waller.

Thy virtue, prince, has stood the test of fortune
Like purest gold, that, tortur'd in the furnace,
Comes out more bright, and brings forth all its weight. Addison.

3. Means of trial.

Whom should my muse then fly to, but the best
Of kings for grace; of poets, for my test? B. Jonson.

To be read herself she need not fear;
Each test, and every light, her muse will bear. Dryden.

Your noble race
We banish not, but they forsake the place:
Our doors are open: True; but, ere they come,
You toss your censing test, and fume the room. Dryden.

4. That with which any thing is compared in order to prove its genuineness.

Unerring Nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchang'd, and universal light,
Life, force, and beauty must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of art. Pope.

5. Discriminative characteristic.

Our penal laws no sons of yours admit,
Our test excludes your tribe from benefit. Dryden.

6. Judgement; distinction.

Who would excel, when few can make a test,
Betwixt indiff'rent writing and the best? Dryden.

TESTABLE.* adj. [testable, Fr. from test.] Capable of witnessing or bearing witness. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

TESTACEOUS. adj. [testaceus, Lat. testace, Fr.]

1. Consisting of shells; composed of shells.

2. Having continuous, not jointed shells: opposed to crustaceous.

Testaceous, with naturalists, is a term given only to such fish whose strong and thick shells are entire, and of a piece; because those which are joined, as the lobsters, are crustaceous: but in medicine all preparations of shells, and substances of the like kind, are thus called. Quincy.

Several shells were found upon the shores, of the crustaceous and testaceous kind. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The mineral particles in these shells are plainly to be distinguished from the testaceous ones, or the texture and substance of the shell. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

TESTAMENT.† n. s. [testament, Fr. testamentum, Lat.]

1. A will; any writing directing the disposal of the possessions of a man deceased.

He bringeth arguments from the love which always the testator bore him, imagining that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it which other men can no where by reading find. Hooker.

All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,

Would they strip from us. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

He ordained by his last testament, that his Eneides should be burnt. Dryden.

2. The name of each of the volumes of the Holy Scripture.

It is not out of any satiety that I change from the Old Testament to the New: these two, as they are the breasts of the church, so they yield milk equally wholesome, equally pleasant unto able nurselings.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. on the N. Test. Ded.

TESTAMENTARY. adj. [testamentaire, Fr. testamentarius, Lat.] Given by will; contained in wills.

How many testamentary charities have been defeated by the negligence or fraud of executors! by the suppression of a will! the subornation of witnesses, or the corrupt sentence of a judge! Atterbury.

TESTAMENTA'TION.* n. s. [from testament.] The act or power of giving by will.

By this law the right of testamentation is taken away, which the inferior tenures had always enjoyed. Burke, Tracts on the Popery Laws.

TESTATE. adj. [testatus, Lat.] Having made a will.

By the canon law, the bishop had the lawful distribution of the goods of persons dying testate and intestate. Ayliffe.

TESTA'TION.* n. s. [testatio, Latin.] Witness; evidence.

How clear a testation have the inspired prophets of God given of old to this truth!

Bp. Hall, Tempt. Repell. D. i. § 6.
TESTA'TOR. n. s. [testator, Lat. testateur, French.] One who leaves a will.

He bringeth arguments from the love or good will which always the testator bore him. Hooker.

TESTA'TRIX. n. s. [Latin.] A woman who leaves a will.

TESTED. adj. [from test.] Tried by a test.

Not with fond shekels of the tested gold. Shakespeare.

TESTER.† n. s. [teste, French, a head; this coin probably being distinguished by the head stamped upon it. Dr. Johnson. — The Italians and French had their testone, and teston; the latter of which Cotgrave states to be of the value of eighteen-pence. Our word was also teston, and testern. "You cannot give him less than a shilling in conscience; for the book he had it out of cost him a teston at least." B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour. "Such another piece as our testerne." Latimer, Serm. 1584, fol. 94. It was of the value of a shilling in our eighth Henry's time, and sunk first to nine-pence, then to sixpence, as Mr. Douce has observed, in Edward the sixth's.]

1. A sixpence.

Come manage me your caliver: hold, there is a tester for thee. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

A crown goes for sixty-pence, a shilling for twelve-pence, and a tester for sixpence. Locke.

Those who bore bulwarks on their backs,
And guarded nations from attacks,
Now practise every plant gesture,
Opening their trunk for every testure. Swift, Miscell.

Young man, your days can ne'er be long,
In flower of age you perish for a song;
Plums and directors, Shylock and his wife,
Will club their testers now to take thy life. Pope.

2. The cover of a bed.

Each hole and cupboard they explore,
Each creek and cranny of his chamber,
Run hurry-scurry round the floor,
And o'er the bed and tester clamber. Gray, Long Story.

TESTERN.* n. s. A sixpence. See TESTER.

TO TESTERN.* v. a. [from testern.] To present with sixpence. Not in use.

To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have testerned me. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

TESTICLE. n. s. [testiculus, Lat.] Stone.
That a beaver, to escape the hunter, bites off his testicles or stones, is a tenet very ancient. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The more certain sign from the pains reaching to the groin and testicles. Wiseman, Surgery.

TESTIFICA'TION. n. s. [testificatio, Latin, from testify.] The act of witnessing.

When together we have all received those heavenly mysteries wherein Christ imparteth himself unto us, and giveth visible testification of our blessed communion with him, we should, in hatred of all heresies, factions, and schisms, declare openly ourselves united. Hooker.

In places solemnly dedicated for that purpose, is a more direct service and testification of our homage to God. South.

TESTIFICATOR. n. s. [from testificor, Lat.] One who witnesses.

TE'STIFIER.† n. s. [from testify.] One who testifies.

The strength and validity of every testimony must bear proportion with the authority of the testifier; and the authority of the testifier is founded upon his ability and integrity.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

To TE'STIFY. v. n. [testificor, Lat.] To witness; to prove; to give evidence.

Jesus needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man. St. John, ii. 25.

One witness need not testify against any, to cause him to die. Numb. xxxv. 30.

Heaven and earth shall testify for us, that you put us to death wrongfully. 1 Mac. ii. 47.

Th' event was dire,

As this place testifies.

Milton, P. L.
She appeals to their closets, to their books of devotion, to testify what care she has taken to establish her children in a life of solid piety and devotion. Law.

To TE'STIFY. v. a. To witness; to give evidence of any point.

We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness. St. John, iii. 11.

TE'STILY. adv. [from testy.] Fretfully; peevishly; morosely.

TESTIMONIAL. n. s. [testimonial, French; testimonium, Latin.] A writing produced by any one as an evidence for himself.

Hospitable people entertain all the idle vagrant reports, and send them out with passports and testimonials, and will have them pass for legitimate. Gov. of the Tongue.

It is possible to have such testimonials of divine authority as may be sufficient to convince the more reasonable part of mankind, and pray what is wanting in the testimonies of Jesus Christ? Burnet, Theory.

A clerk does not exhibit to the bishop letters missive or testimonial, testifying his good behaviour. Ayliffe.

TESTIMONY. n. s. [testimonium, Lat.]

1. Evidence given; proof by witness.

The proof of every thing must be by the testimony of such as the parties produce. Spenser.

If I bring you sufficient testimony, my ten thousand ducats are mine. Shakespeare, Cym.

Evidence is said to arise from testimony, when we depend upon the credit and relation of others for the truth or falsehood of any thing. Wilkins.

I could not answer it to the world, if I gave not your lordship my testimony of being the best husband. Dryden.

I must bear this testimony to Otway's memory, that the passions are truly touched in his Venice Preserved. Dryden.

2. Public evidences.

We maintain the uniform testimony and tradition of the primitive church. White.

By his precept a sanctuary is fram'd,

An ark, and in the ark his testimony;
The records of his covenant. Milton, P. L.

3. Open attestation; profession.

Thou for the testimony of truth hast born Universal reproach. Milton, P. L.

To TE'STIMONY. v. a. To witness. A word not used.

Let him be not testimonied in his own bringings forth, and he shall appear a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

TE'STINESS.† n. s. [from testy.] Moroseness; peevishness.

He may be a little angry for my so rough usage; but my mother, having power of his testiness, shall turn all into my commendations. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Testiness is a disposition or aptness to be angry. Locke.

TE'STON.* n. s. [teston, Fr.] A sixpence; a tester. See TESTER.

Lo! what it is that makes white rags so deare,
That men must give a teston for a queare.

Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 1.

TESTU'DINATED. adj. [testudo, Latin.] Roofed; arched.

TESTUDINEOUS. adj. [testudo, Lat.] Resembling the shell of a tortoise.

TE'STY.† adj. [testie, French; testoso, Italian; both rendered headstrong, as well as testy, by Cotgrave and Florio; thus pointing to the head, teste, testa, as the origin of the word.] Fretful; peevish; apt to be angry.

Lead these testy rivals so astray,
As one must not within another's way. Shakspeare.

Must I stand and crouch under your testy humour?

King Pyrrhus cur'd his splenetic
And testy courtiers with a kick. Hudibras.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a touchy, testy, pleasing fellow:

Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,

There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Addison.

TE'TCHY. adj. Froward; peevish: a corruption of testy or touchy.

A grievous burthen was thy birth to me,
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

A silly schoolboy, coming to say my lesson to the world, that peevish and tetchy master. Gravuit.

TETE.* n. s. [French.] False hair; a wig worn by ladies.

An old baronet fell in love with a young lady of small fortune for her beautiful brown locks. He married her on a sudden: but was greatly disappointed upon seeing her wig or tete the next morning thrown carelessly upon her toilette, and her ladyship appearing at breakfast in very bright red hair, a colour the old gentleman happened to have a particular aversion to. Graves, Spirit, Quixote, B. 3. ch. 20.

TETE A TETE. n. s. [French.] Cheek by jawl.

Long before the squire and dame
Are tête à tête. Prior.

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Choose for companions tête à tête;

Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit whene'er you will. Swift, Miscell.

TE'THER. n. s. [See TEDDER.] A string by which horses are held from pasturing too wide.

Hamlet is young,
And with a larger tether may he walk
Than may be given you. Shakspeare.

Fame and censure walk'd together. Swift, Miscell.

Imagination has no limits; but where it is confined, we find the shortness of our tether. Swift.

To TE'THER.† v. a. [from the noun.] To confine with a tether.

TE'TRAD.* n. s. [tetras, tetradis, Lat.] The number four; a collection of four things.

Four here takes place again in the assignment of the masculine and feminine numbers; whence I further conceive that, under the number of this more complex tetrad, he [Pythagoras] taught his disciples the mystery of the whole creation. Mor., Conv. Cabb. (1653.) p. 155.

TE'TRAGONAL. adj. [τετραγωνος, Gr.] Four square.

From the beginning of the disease, reckoning on unto the seventh day, the moon will be in a tetragonal or quadrate aspect, that is, four signs removed from that wherein the disease began; in the fourteenth day it will be an opposite aspect, and at the end of the third septenary tetragonal again. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TETRA'METER.* n. s. [tetrametrum, Lat.] A verse consisting of four feet.

The first are couplets interchanged of sixteen and fourteen feet; the second of equal tetrameters.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 4.

TETRA'METER.* adj. Having four metrical feet.

Every reader who has an ear for metre will easily perceive, that it is written very exactly in verses of fifteen syllables without rhyme, in imitation of the most common species of the Latin tetrameter iambic. Tyrwhitt.

TETRAPE'TALOUS. adj. [τετραπέταλος, Gr.] Such flowers as consist of four leaves round the style: plants having a tetrapetalous flower constitute a distinct kind. Miller.

All the tetrapetalous siliqueous plants are alkalulent. Arbuthnot.

TE'TRARCH. n. s. [tetrarcha, Latin; tetrarque, Fr. τετραρχης, Gr.] A Roman governor of the fourth part of a province.

All the earth,
Her kings, and tetrarches, are their tributaries:
People and nations pay them hourly stipends. B. Jonson.

TETRA'RCHATE.† } n. s. [τετραρχία, Gr.]

TE'TRARCHY. } tetrarchat, Fr.] A Roman government of a fourth part of a province.

gave him as a rare gift to Solymam. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

TE'TRICALNESS.* n. s. [from tetric.] Frowardness; perverseness; sourness.

It requires diligence — to contend with younger ignorance, and elder obstinacy, and aged *tetric*ness. Bp. Gauden, Hierap. (1653.) p. 170.

TETRI'CITY.* n. s. [tetricité, old French.] Sourness; perverseness. Cockeram.

TE'TRICK.* adj. [tetricue, Fr.] Sour; harsh; perverse; morose.

In a thick and cloudy air men are tetric, sad, and peevish. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 81.

Severe, sad, dry, tetric, are common epithets to scholars. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 126.

The old tetric philosophers looked always with indignation upon such a face of things. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 26.

TETTER. n. s. [teteþ, Saxon.] A scab; a scurf; a ringworm.

A most instant tetter bark'd about
Most lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body. Shaksp. Hamlet.
A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick.

Dryden.

TO TETTER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To infect with a tetter.

As for my country I have shed my blood,
Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs
Coin words till their decay, against those menles,
Which we disdain should tetter us. Shaksp. Coriol.

TETTISH.* adj. [perhaps a corruption of tetchy. The Scotch use tittish in this sense, which Dr. Jamieson has noticed, with a reference of it to tit, a stroke. This etymon may be doubted.] Capitious; testy; ill-humoured.

This rogue, if he had been sober, sure had been tame, is the most testish knave.

Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

Who will be troubled with a tettish girl?

Beaum. and Fl.

TEUTO'NICK.* adj. Spoken by the Teutones, or ancient Germans.

Our knowledge of the northern literature is so scanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonic the original is not always to be found in any ancient language.

Dr. Johnson, Pref. to his Dict.

TEUTO'NICK.* n. s. The language of the Teutones; by ellipsis.

The Icelandick is the mother of the modern Swedish and Danish tongues, in like manner as the Anglo-Saxon is the parent of our English. Both these mother-tongues are dialects of the ancient Gothic or Teutonic.

Bp. Percy, Pref. to Runick Poetry.

TEW. n. s. [towe, a hempen rope, Dutch.] 1. Materials for any thing. Skinner.

2. An iron chain. Ainsworth.

TO TEW.† v. a. [tapan, Sax.]

1. To work; to beat so as to soften: of leather we say to taw. Dr. Johnson.—It is a naval expression applied to hemp: to tew hemp.

2. To tease; to tumble over or about; to pull.

Do not anger 'em,
But go in quietly, and slip in softly,
They will so tew you else.

Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

TO TEW.* v. n. To labour. See TO TUE.

TEWEL.† n. s. [tuyau or tuyal, Fr.]

In the back of the forge against the fire-place, is fixed a thick iron plate, and a taper pipe in it above five inches long, called a tewel, or tewel iron, which comes through the back of the forge; into this tewel is smoked the bellows. Moxon.

Soche a smoke—

As—where that men melte lead,

Lo, all on hie from the tewell.

Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 559.

TO TEWTAW. v. a. [formed from tew by reduplication.] To beat; to break.

The method and way of watering, pilling, breaking, and tewtawing of hemp and flax, is a particular business. Mortimer.

TEXT. n. s. [texte, Fr. textus, Lat.]

1. That on which a comment is written.

We expect your next
Should be no comment, but a text,
To tell how modern beasts are vexed. Waller.

2. A sentence of Scripture.

In religion

What error, but some sober brow
Will bless it, and approve it with a text? Shaks.

Some prime articles of faith are not delivered in a literal or catechistical form of speech, but are collected and concluded by argumentation out of sentences of Scripture, and by comparing of sundry texts with one another. White.

His mind he should fortify with some few texts, which are home and apposite to his case. South.

TO TEXT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To write as a text.

Indifferent judges might condemn me for
A most malicious slanderer, nay text it
Upon my forehead.

Beaum. and Fl. Th. and Theodoret.

TEXT-HAND.* n. s. A particular kind of large hand-writing: so called, because formerly the text was ever written in a large hand, and the comment in a small. As text-hand is both square and round, it means little more than a large hand of each sort. The books of J. Bad. Ascensius, and of the other black-letter printers, give one a perfect notion of the reason of this name. Pegge.

Once she writ only text-hand, when
She scribbled giants, and no men.

Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 22.

TEXTILE. adj. [textilis, Lat.] Woven; capable of being woven.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as in the warp and woof of textiles.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The materials of them were not from any herb, as other textiles, but from a stone called amiantus.

Wilkins.

TEXTMAN. n. s. [text and man.] A man ready in quotation of text.

Men's daily occasions require the doing of a thousand things, which it would puzzle the best textman readily to bethink himself of a sentence in the Bible, clear enough to satisfy a scrupulous conscience of the lawfulness of. Sunderson.

TEXTORIAL.* adj. [textorius, Latin.] Belonging to weaving.

From the cultivation of the textorial arts among the orientals came Darius's wonderful cloth.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. lxxviii.

TEXTRINE. adj. [textrina, Lat.] Relating to weaving.

It is a wonderful artifice how newly-hatched maggots, not the parent animal, because she emits no web, nor hath any textrine art, can convolve the stubborn leaf, and bind it with the thread it weaves from its body. Derham.

TEXTUAL.* adj. [textuel, Fr.]

1. Contained in the text.

They seek to rout and disarray the wise and well-couched order of St. Paul's own words, using a certain textual riot to chop off the heads of the word presbytery.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Def. § 5.

The Keri is the marginal reading; the Chetib is the textual reading.

Waterland, Script. Vind. P. ii. p. 125.

2. Serving for texts.

Here shall your majesty find—speculation interchanged with experience, positive theology with polemical, textual with discursive.

Bp. Hall, Works, Dedic.

TEXTUALIST.* n. s. [from textual.] One ready in citing texts.

How nimble textualists and grammarians for the tongue the rabbins are, their comments can witness. But, as in Chaucer, "the greatest clerks are not the wisest men;" so, among them, these that are so great textualists are not best at the text.

Lightfoot, Miscell. (1629), p. 20.

TEXTUARY. adj. [from text.]

1. Contained in the text.

He extends the exclusion unto twenty days, which in the textuary sense is fully accomplished in one. Brown.

2. Serving as a text; authoritative.

I see no ground why his reason should be textuary to ours, or that God intended him an universal headship. Glanville.

TEXTUARIST.† n. s. [textuaire, Fr. from TEXTUARY.†] text.] One ready in the text of Scripture; a divine well versed in Scripture.

Common textuaries abolish laws, as the rabble demolish images; in the zeal of their hammers oft violating the sepulchres of good men.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

TEXTUIST.* n. s. [from text.] One ready in quotation of texts.

I remember the little that our Saviour could prevail about this doctrine of charity against the crabbed textuists of his time.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. Ded.

TEXTURE.† n. s. [texture, Fr. Cotgrave; textus, Latin.]

1. The act of weaving.

Skins, although a natural habit unto all before the invention of texture, was something more unto Adam. Brown.

2. A web; a thing woven.

Others, far in the grassy dale,
Their humble texture weave. Thomson, Spring.

3. Manner of weaving with respect either to form or matter.

Curious celatures, and artificial textures.

Under state of richest texture spread.

Milton, P. L.

A veil of richest texture wrought she wears.

Pope.

4. Disposition of the parts of bodies; combination of parts.

Spirits —

Nor in their liquid texture mortal wound
Receive, no more than can the fluid air.

Milton, P. L.

While the particles continue entire, they may compose bodies of the same nature and texture now, with water and earth composed of entire particles in the beginning. Newton.

THACK.* n. s. [thace, Saxon.] Thatch: a common northern word, and old in our language. Hence also a thackster, a thatcher. Prompt. Parv.

They would in houses of thacks

Their lives lead. Chaucer's Dr. ver. 1771.

THAN.† conjunction. [than, Goth. ðanne, Saxon.] A particle placed in comparison after the comparative adjective or adverb, noting a less degree of the quality compared in the word that follows than: as, Monarchy is better than anarchy. The hawk flies more swiftly than the pigeon.

Were we not better to fall once with virtue,
Than draw a wretched and dishonour'd breath?

B. Jonson.

More true delight in that small ground,
Than in possessing all the earth was found.

Daniel.

I never met with a more unhappy conjuncture of affairs than in the business of that unfortunate earl.

King Charles.

I love you for nothing more than for the just esteem you have for all the sons of Adam. Swift.

THANE.† n. s. [ðegn, Saxon, meaning originally a servant. "The (Anglo-Saxon) nobles were called thanes or servants. It must be remembered, that the German chiefs were raised to that honourable rank by those qualifications, which drew after them a numerous train of followers and dependants. If it was honourable to be followed by a numerous train, so it was honourable in a secondary degree to be a follower of a man of consideration; and this honour was the greater in proportion to the quality of the chief, and to the nearness of the attendance upon his person." Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. B. 2. ch. 7. The Icel. thegn is tantamount to lord. That and the Sax. ðegn have been referred by Dr. Jamieson, to the verbs thienan, thenan, ðegnian, ðenan, to serve. See also Spiegel, Gloss. Su. Goth. p. 512. "Thanes vel danes: vox illa apud Anglos olim significabat les pairs temporels, que les Normands nommèrent barons. Vid. Larrey in Hist. Angl. ex Tyrrello." An old title of honour, perhaps equivalent to baron.

By Sinel's death I know I'm thane of Glamis;
But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives.
Shakespeare.

THA'NELANDS.* n. s. pl. Such lands as were granted by charters of the Saxon kings to their thanes with all immunities, except the threefold necessity of expedition, repair of castles, and mending of bridges. Cowel.

THA'NESHIP.* n. s. [ðegen-ſcipe, Sax.] The office and dignity of a thane; the seignory of a thane.

The thaneship of Glamis was the ancient inheritance of Macbeth's family.

Seevens, Notes on Shakespeare.

To THANK. v. a. [ðancian, Saxon; dancken, Dutch; thanken, German.]

1. To return acknowledgements for any favour or kindness.

For your stubborn answer
The king shall know it, and, no doubt, thank you.
Shakespeare.

We thank God always for you. 2 Thess. i. 3.
He was so true a father of his country,
To thank me for defending ev'n his foes,
Because they were his subjects.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. It is used often in a contrary or ironical sense.

Ill fare our ancestor impure,
For this we may thank Adam. Milton, P. L.
Weigh the danger with the doubtful bliss,
And thank yourself, if ought should fall amiss.
Dryden.

That Portugal hath yet no more than a suspension of arms, they may thank themselves, because they came so late into the treaty; and, that they came so late, they may thank the Whigs, whose false representations they believed. Swift.

THANK.† n. s. [ðanc, ðancaſ, Saxon; THANKS. } dancke, Dutch.] Acknowledgement paid for favour or kindness; expression of gratitude. Thanks is commonly used of verbal acknowledgement; gratitude, of real repayment. It is seldom used in the singular. Dr. Johnson.—Dr. Johnson had overlooked the use of the singular number in the Saxon and in old English; as also in many later established authorities.

The poorest service is repaid with thanks.

Shakespeare.

Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke.
—Thanks good Egeus, what's the news? Shaks.
The fool saith, I have no thank for all my good deed; and they that eat my bread speak evil of me. Eccius. xx. 16.

If ye love them which love you, what thank have ye?
He took bread and gave thanks to God in presence of them all. St. Luke, vi. 32. Acts, xxvii. 35.

Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory. 1 Cor. xv.

Some embrace suits which never mean to deal effectually in them; but they will win a thank, or take a reward. Bacon.

To remit the debt of some few farthings, it were small thank. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

The tiller shall root up all that burdens the soil without thank to your bondage.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

For this to the infinitely Good we owe Immortal thanks. Milton, P. L.

THA'NKFUL. adj. [ðancful, Saxon:] Full of gratitude; ready to acknowledge good received.

A thankful remembrance of his death.

Be thankful unto him, and bless his name. Comm. Prayer.

In favour, to use men with much difference is good; for it maketh the person preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon, Ess.

Live, thou great encourager of arts;
Live ever in our thankful hearts. Dryden.

THA'NKFULLY. adv. [from thankful.] With lively and grateful sense of good received.

Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully. Shakespeare.

If you have liv'd, take thankfully the past;
Make, as you can, the sweet remembrance last. Dryden.

Out of gold how to draw as many distinct substances as I can separate from vitriol, I shall very thankfully learn. Boyle.

THA'NKFULNESS. n. s. [from thankful.] Gratitude; lively sense or ready acknowledgment of good received.

He scarcely would give me thanks for what I had done, for fear that thankfulness might have an introduction of reward. Sidney.

Will you give me this maid your daughter?
—As freely, son, as God did give her me.

—Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankfulness. Shakespeare.

The celebration of these holy mysteries being ended, retire with all thankfulness of heart for having been admitted to that heavenly feast.

Thankfulness and submission make us happy. Bp. Taylor. L'Estrange.

THA'NKLESS. adj. [from thank.]

1. Unthankful; ungrateful; making no acknowledgment.

Let's so great good, as he for her had wrought,
Should hide unknown, and buried be in thankless thought. Spenser.

That she may feel
How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is,
To have a thankless child. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

One grateful woman to thy fame supply'd
What a whole thankless land to his deny'd. Pope.

2. Not deserving, or not likely, to gain thanks.

The contracting and extending the lines and sense of others, if the first authors might speak for themselves, would appear a thankless office. Wotton.

Wage still their wars,
And bring home on thy breast more thankless scars. Crashaw.

THA'NKLESSNESS. n. s. [from thankless.]

Ingratitude; failure to acknowledge good received.

Not t' have written then, seems little less Than worst of civil vices, thanklessness. Donne.

THANKOFFERING. n. s. [thank and offering.] Offering paid in acknowledgement of mercy.

A thousand thankofferings are due to that Providence which has delivered our nation from these absurd iniquities. Watts.

To THANKSGIVE.* v. a. [thank and give.]

To celebrate; to distinguish by solemn rites. Not in use.

To thankgive or blesse a thing in way to a sacred use, he took to be an offering of it unto God.

Mede, Diatr. p. 55.

THANKSGIVER.* n. s. A giver of thanks.

We find our never-to-be-forgotten example, the devout thanksgiver, David, continually declaring the great price he set upon the divine favours.

Barrow, Sermon on the Duty of Thanksgiving.

THANKSGIVING. n. s. [thanks and give.] Celebration of mercy.

These sacred hymns Christianity hath peculiar to itself, the other being songs too of praise and thanksgiving, wherewith as we serve God so the Jews likewise. Hooker.

Of old there were songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God. Noh. xii. 46.

We should acknowledge our obligations to God for the many favours we receive, by continual praises and thanksgivings. Tillotson.

The common practice of all Christian churches and states, in appointing and keeping days of publick thanksgiving and humiliation, is argument sufficient to prove, that in the common sense of Christians it is not forbidden in Scripture. Nelson.

THA'NKWORTHY. adj. [thank and worthy.] Deserving gratitude; meritorious.

This is thankworthy, if a man endure grief. 1 Pet. ii. 19.

If love be compell'd, and cannot choose,
How can it grateful or thankworthy prove? Davies.

THARM. n. s. [ðearpm, Saxon; darm, Dutch, the gut.] Intestines twisted for several uses.

THAT.† pronoun. [that, thata, Gothick; ðæt, Sax. dat, Dutch.]

1. Not this, but the other.

He wins me by that means I told you. Shaks.

Octavia, not only that,
That were excusable, that and thousands more
Of semblable import, but he hath wag'd
New wars against Pompey. Shakespeare.

2. Which; relating to an antecedent thing.

The sinner makes an aberration from the scope or mark that is set before him. Perkins.

You'll rue the time
That clogs me with this answer. Shaks. Macbeth.
Nothing they but dust can show,
Or bones that hasten to be so. Cowley.

When there is no such evident certainty as to take away all kind of doubting; in such cases, a judgement that is equal and impartial must incline to the greater probabilities. Wilkins.

3. Who; relating to an antecedent person.

[In our management of the relatives who, which, that, it may be a good general rule to apply who to persons, which to things, and that to things chiefly. But when the antecedent is the second person, not only that, but which, is used for who by our best writers. And this use, which is enough authorized, may be worth retaining, not merely for the grace of variety, but for the convenience of pronunciation. Bp. Hurd on Addison's Guard. No. 160.]

It is thou, O king, that art become strong.

Dan. iv. 22.

Ye that are of the fountain of Israel.

Ps. lxxviii. 26. marg.

You are a person that very eminently distinguish yourself.

Addison, Guard. No. 160.

Saints that taught and led the way to heav'n.

Tickell.

4. It sometimes serves to save the repetition of a word or words foregoing.

I'll know your business, that I will.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

They said, what is that to us? see thou to that.

St. Matt. xxvii. 4.

Ye defraud, and that your brethren. 1 Cor. vi. 8.

Yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies I will not cast them away. Lev. xxvi. 44.

We must direct our prayers to right ends; and that either in respect of the prayer itself, or the things we pray for.

Wh. Duty of Man.

They weep, as if they meant

That way as least proud Nabas to prevent. Cowley.

This runick subject will occur upon that of poetry. Temple.

What is inviting in this sort of poetry proceeds not so much from the idea of a country life itself, as from that of its tranquillity. Pope.

5. Opposed to this, as the other to one.

This is not fair, nor profitable that;

Nor t' other question proper for debate.

Dryden, Pers.

6. When this and that relate to foregoing words, this is referred like hic or cecy to the latter, and that like ille or cela to the former.

In this scale gold, in t' other fame does lie, The weight of that mounts this so high. Cowley.

7. Such as.

By religion is meant a living up to those principles, that is, to act conformably to our best reason, and to live as becomes those who believe a God and a future state. Tillotson.

8. That which; what.

Sir, I think the meat wants that I have, — Basting. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

9. The thing.

11. By way of eminence.

This is that Jonathan, the joy and grace, That Jonathan in whom does mixt remain All that fond mothers wish. Cowley.

Hence love himself, that tyrant of my days.

Cowley.

12. In THAT. Because; in consequence of.

Things are preached not in that they are taught, but in that they are published. Hooker.

THAT.† conjunction. [thatei, Goth.]

1. Because.

It is not that I love you less Than when before your feet I lay:

But to prevent the sad increase Of hopeless love, I keep away. Waller.

Forgive me that I thus your patience wrong. Cowley.

2. Noting a consequence.

That he should dare to do me this disgrace, Is fool or coward word upon my face? Dryden.

The custom and familiarity of these tongues do sometimes so far influence the expressions in these epistles, that one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke.

3. Noting indication.

We answered that we held it so agreeable, as we both forgot dangers past and fears to come, that we thought an hour spent with him was worth years of our former life. Bacon, New Atlantis.

In the midst of this darkness they saw so much light, as to believe that when they died they went immediately to the stars. Heylin.

I have shewed before, that a meer possibility to the contrary, can by no means hinder a thing from being highly credible. Wilkins.

4. Noting a final end.

Treat it kindly, that it may

Wish at least with us to stay. Cowley.

THATCH.† n. s. [ðace, Saxon, straw, Skinner; from ðac, a roof, in Icelandic, thak, Lye; thaecka, tecto munire: vox antiquissima, omnibusque linguis a Scythica matre oriundis communis. Sere-nius. Formerly thack. See THACK.] Straw laid upon the top of a house to keep out the weather.

Hard by a sty, beneath a roof of thatch,

Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days

Baskets of fish at Billingsgate did watch,

Cod, whiting, oyster, mackerel, sprat, or plaice.

Pope.

A plough-boy, who has never seen any thing but thatched houses, naturally imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house.

Watts.

Then came rosy Health from her cottage of thatch,

Where never physician had lifted the latch.

Smart.

To THATCH. v. a. [ðaccian, Sax.] To cover as with straw.

Make false hair, and thatch

Your poor thin roofs with burthens of the dead.

Shakespeare.

Moss growth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Then Rome was poor, and there you might behold

The palace thatch'd with straw.

Dryden.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris

Might raise a house above two stories:

A lyric ode would slate, a catch

Would tile, an epigram would thatch.

Swift.

THATCHER. n. s. [from thatch.] One whose trade is to cover houses with straw.

You merit new employments daily;

Our thatcher, ditcher, gard'ner, bailly.

Swift.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 408.

To THAW. v. n. [ðapan, Saxon; degen, Dutch.]

1. To grow liquid after congelation; to melt.

When they melted maid

His letter at thy pillow hath laid:

If thou begin'st to thaw for this,

May my name step in.

Donne.

It on firm land

Thaws not, but gathers heat, and ruin seems Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice.

Milton, P. L.

Having let that ice thaw of itself, and frozen the liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing.

Boyle.

o Solitude! romantick maid, Whether by nodding towers you tread, Or climb the Andes' cliffed side, Or by the Nile's coy source abide, Or, starting from your half-year's sleep, From Hecla view the thawing deep; — These, fond nymph! again I woo, And again thy steps pursue.

Grainger.

2. To remit the cold which had caused frost.

To THAW. v. a. To melt what was congealed.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born, Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the icicles.

Shakespeare.

Think not that Cæsar bears such rebel blood, That will be thaw'd from the true quality With that which melteth fools.

Shakespeare.

My love is thaw'd,

Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire, Bears no impression of the thing it was.

Shaks.

She can unlock

The clasping charm, and thaw the numbing spell.

Milton, Comus.

Burnish'd steel, that cast a glare

From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air.

Dryden.

Her icy heart is thaw'd.

Granville.

THAW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Liquefaction of any thing congealed.

A man of my kidney, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw.

Shakespeare.

Hardens his stubborn heart, but still as ice

More harden'd after thaw.

Milton, P. L.

2. Warmth such as liquefies congelation.

I was the prince's jester, and duller than a great thaw.

Shakespeare, Much Ado.

That cold country where discourse doth freeze in the air all winter, and may be heard in the next summer, or at a great thaw.

Wilkins, Math. Magick.

When sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,

A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rain, First the tender blade peeps.

Dryden.

THE.† article. [ðe, Sax. articulus. Præfigitur nominibus per omnes casus utriusque numeri, haud secus ac apud nos ipsa the; præsertim verò apud scriptores Normanno-Saxonicos. Lye, edit. Manning.]

1. The article noting a particular thing.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt;

He only liv'd but till he was a man,

The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd, In the unshrinking station where he fought,

But like a man he died.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bed-chamber, for the which he could not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promise.

Clarendon.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,

Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.

Cowley.

I'll march the muses' Hannibal.

Cowley.

The fair example of the heav'nly lark,

Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark;

Above the stars let thy bold musick sound,

Thy humble nest build on the ground.

Cowley.

The fruit

Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste

Brought death into the world.

Milton, P. L.

Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie,

All but the mournful Philomel and I.

Pope.

2. Before a vowel e is commonly cut off in verse. Dr. Johnson.—It is a barbarous custom, now rarely observed.

Who had th' especial engines been to rear
His fortunes up into the state they were. Daniel.
Th' adorning thee with so much art
Is but a barb'rous skill,

'Tis like the pois'ning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill.

Cowley.

3. Sometimes he is cut off.

In this scale gold, in *o'*ther fame does lie.

Cowley.

4. It is used by way of consequential reference.

The longer sin hath kept possession of the heart,
the harder it will be to drive it out.

Wh. Duty of Man.

5. In the following passage the is used according to the French idiom.

As all the considerable governments among the Alps are commonwealths, so it is a constitution the most adapted of any to the poverty of these countries.

Addison on Italy.

THEATRICAL.† adj. [theatral, Fr. theatralis, Latin.] Belonging to a theatre.

In theatral actions he personates Herod in his majesty. Comment. on Chaucer, (1665,) p. 29.

THEATRE. n. s. [theatre, Fr. theatrum, Lat.]

1. A place in which shews are exhibited; a playhouse.

This wide and universal theatre

Presents more woful pageants than the scene

Wherein we play.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

When the boats came within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, yet so as they might go about, so as they all stood as in a theatre beholding this light.

Bacon.

2. A place rising by steps or gradations like a theatre.

Shade above shade, a woody theatre

Of stateliest view.

Milton, P. L.

In the midst of this fair valley stood

A native theatre, which rising slow,

By just degrees o'erlook'd the ground below.

Dryden.

No theatres of oaks around him rise,
Whose roots earth's centre touch, whose heads the skies.

Harte.

THEATRICK. } adj. [theatrum, Lat.] See THEATRICAL } nick; suiting a theatre;
pertaining to a theatre.

Theatrical forms stickle hard for the prize of religion: a distorted countenance is made the mark of an upright heart.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state,
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate.

Pope.

THEATRICALLY. adv. [from theatrical.]

ðæn.] To thrive; to prosper.

Let him never thee! Chaucer, Non. Fr. Tale.
Fairst mote he thee! Spenser, F. Q.

THEFT.† n. s. [ðyfte, Sax. from thieve.]

1. The act of stealing.

Theft is an unlawful felonious taking away of another man's goods against the owner's knowledge or will.

Cowel.

His thefts were too open, his filching was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time.

Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Their nurse Euriphile,
Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children.

Shakspeare.

Deceit in trade, a secret theft: extortion, an impudent theft.

Holyday.

The thefts upon the publick can be looked into and punished.

Davenant.

2. The thing stolen.

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive,
whether ox, ass, or sheep, he shall restore double.

Exod. xxii. 4.

THEIR.† pron. [ðeopa, of them, Saxon;
theirra, Icel. the same.]

1. Of them: the pronoun possessive, from they.

The round world should have shook
Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens.

Shakspeare.

For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccaccio, who likewise received no little help from his master Petrarch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccaccio.

Dryden.

2. Theirs is used when any thing comes in construction between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow,
and they never in theirs to refuse.

Hooker.

They gave the same names to their own idols which the Egyptians did to theirs.

Raleigh.

The penalty to thy transgression due,
And due to theirs, which out of time will grow.

at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues.

Dryden.

And reading wish, like theirs, our fate and fame.

Pope.

THEISM.* n. s. [theisme, Fr. from θεός,
Greek.] The acknowledgement of a God, as opposed to atheism; deism, which see.

Having laid down in this manner the general principles of theism, he says nothing of the particular doctrines of Christianity except in one verse.

Ld. Monboddo, Anc. Metaph. iv. 387.

THEIST.* n. s. [theiste, French.] A deist,
which see.

I purposed to have tendered my service as a priest,—without any stipend or wages, save only a room to have said my office in twice a day for our church, king, and country; as God hath enabled me (and his only be the praise therefore) in prisons, dungeons, fields, chambers, or ships upon sea, or land, among rebels, theists, atheists, philologists, wits, masters of reason, puritans, &c.

for these eighteen years daily to do.

Dean Martin, Lett. (1662.) p. 45.

The word deist, or theist, in its original signification, implies merely the belief of a God, being opposed to atheist; and so there may be deists of various kinds.

Waterland, Christ. Vindici. p. 62.

THEISTICAL.* } adj. [from theist.] Be-THEISTICK. } longing to theists; deistical, which see.

The theistical club have set this up as a principle.

Leslie, Short Method with the Deists.

It must appear at first sight, that nothing could be more contradictory to the first principles of the Christian religion, than those of the atheistical or sceptical sects, which at that time prevailed very much both among the Greeks and the Romans;

nor shall we find that the theistical sects were much less at enmity with it, when we consider the doctrines they held upon the nature of God and the soul. Ld. Lykleton, Obs. on the Conv. of St. Paul.

From an abhorrence of superstition, he appears to have adopted the most distant extremes of the theistic system. Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 208.

THEM, the oblique of they.† [thaim, Goth.]

The materials of them were not from any herb.

Wilkins.

THEME. n. s. [theme, Fr. from θέμα.]

1. A subject on which one speaks or writes.

Every object of our idea is called a theme,
whether it be a being or not being.

Watts.

Two truths are told,

As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

When a soldier was the theme, my name

Was not far off.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream

My great example, as it is my theme:

Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;

Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full.

Denham.

Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,
With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme.

Roscommon.

Though Tyber's streams immortal Rome behold,

Though foaming Hermus swells with tides of gold,
From heav'n itself though seven-fold Nilus flows,

And harvest on a hundred realms bestows;

These now no more shall be the muse's themes,

Lost in my fame, as in the sea their streams. Pope.

2. A short dissertation written by boys on any topic.

Forcing the empty wits of children to compose themes, verses, and orations. Milton on Education.

3. The original word whence others are derived.

Let scholars daily reduce the words to their original or themes, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs.

Watts.

THEMSELVES. n. s. [See THEY and SELF.]

1. These very persons: in this sense it is nominative.

Whatever evil befalleth in that, themselves have made themselves worthy to suffer it.

Hooker.

2. The oblique case of they and selves.

They open to themselves at length the way.

Milton, P. L.

Such things as in themselves are equally true and certain, may not yet be capable of the same kind or degree of evidence as to us.

Wilkins.

Waken children out of sleep with a low call,
and give them kind usage till they come perfectly to themselves.

Locke.

THEN. adv. [than, Gothick; ðan, Saxon;
ðan, Dutch.]

1. At that time.

The then bishop of London, Dr. Laud, attended on his majesty throughout that whole journey.

Clarendon.

Thee, then a boy, within my arms I laid.

Dryden.

2. Afterwards; immediately afterwards;
soon afterwards.

If an herb be cut off from the roots in winter,
and then the earth be trodden down hard, the roots will become very big in summer.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. In that case; in consequence.

If God's immediate speaking and writing argueth precepts, thus spoken or written, to be perpetually moral; then his not writing of precepts argueth them to be temporary.

White.

Had not men been fated to be blind,
Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood.

Dryden.

Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,
And then without a crime the crown had worn.

Dryden.

If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom.

Locke.

4. Therefore ; for this reason.

Whiles then the apostle moves us to unity, and moves us also to an endeavour to it, he bestows upon us as well a discovery as an exhortation, shewing us not only the end, but also the means.

Holyday.

If then His providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good.

Milton, P. L.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,
Thy jealousies and fears, and, while you may,
To peace and soft repose give all the day.

Dryden.

5. At another time : as, now and then, at one time and other.

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars.

Milton, P. L.

One while the master is not aware of what is done, and then in other cases it may fall out to be his own act.

L'Estrange.

6. That time : it has here the effect of a noun.

Till then who knew
The force of those dire arms ?

Milton, P. L.

THENCE. adv. [contracted, according to Minshew, from thence hence.]

1. From that place.

Fast by the oracle of God ; I thence Invoke thy aid.

Milton, P. L.

Surat he took, and thence, preventing fame,
By quick and painful marches thither came.

Dryden.

2. From that time.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days.

Isa. lxx.

3. For that reason.

Not to sit idle with so great a gift
Useless, and thence ridiculous about him.

Milton, S. A.

4. From thence is a barbarous expression, thence implying the same, yet it wants not good authorities.

From thence ; from him, whose daughter
His tears proclaim'd his parting with her ; thence
We have cross'd.

Shakespeare.

There plant eyes, all mist from thence
Purge and disperse.

Milton, P. L.

THENCEFORTH. adv. [thence and forth.]

1. From that time.

Thenceforth this land was tributary made
To ambitious Rome.

Spenser.

They shall be placed in Leinster, and have land Given them to live upon, in such sort as shall become good subjects, to labour thenceforth for their living.

Spenser on Ireland.

Wrath shall be no more
Thenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire.

Milton, P. L.

2. From thenceforth is a barbarous corruption, though it has crept into books where it ought not to be found.

Avert
His holy eyes ; resolving from thenceforth
To leave them to their own polluted ways.

Milton, P. L.

Men grow acquainted with these self-evident truths upon their being proposed ; but whosoever does so, finds in himself that he then begins to know a proposition which he knew not before,
and which from thenceforth he never questions.

Locke.

THENCEFORWARD. adv. [thence and for-ward.] On from that time.

VOL. III.

When he comes to the Lord's table, every com-municant professes to repent, and promises to lead a new life thenceforward.

Kettlewell.

THENCEFRO'M.* adv. [thence and from.] From that place. Not in use, nor proper.

In the space of an hundred years, or thereabout, all the living upon the face of the earth are driven thencefrom by the stroke of death.

Smith on Old Age, p. 113.

THEOCRACY.† n. s. [theocratie, Fr. ῥῆς and κρατία.] Government immediately superintended by God.

A quiet calm subordination of saints and angels under that great theocracy.

Hammond, Works, iv. 488.

The characters of the reign of Christ are chiefly justice, peace, and divine presence or conduct, which is called theocracy.

Burnet, Theology.

THEOCRATICAL.† adj. [theocratique, Fr. ῥῆς and κρατία.] adj. [from theocracy.] Relating to a government administered by God.

The government is neither human nor angelical, but peculiarly theocratical.

Burnet, Theology.

The splendour of divinity shines through every part of this theocratic form.

Warburton, Div. Leg. of Moses, B. 5. § 2.

THEODOLITE.† n. s. [theodolite, Fr. from θεός, Gr. contracted of θεός, or θεοσλας, to observe, and δολος, long. See Morin, Fr. and Gr. Etym. Dict.] A mathematical instrument for taking heights and distances.

Nothing more than an accurate land-surveyor with his chain, sight, and theodolite, is requisite for such a plan as this.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

THEOGONY.† n. s. [theogonie, Fr. θεογονία.]

The generation of the gods. Cockeram.

The theogony of the heathens could admit of such different turns and figurative expressions, as suited the fancy and judgement of each philosopher or poet.

Ld. Shaftesbury.

THEOLOGASTER.* n. s. [from theologue.]

A kind of quack in divinity, as a medicaster in physick ; a low writer or student in divinity.

Theologasters are not contented to see the sun and moon, measure their sight and biggest distance in a glass, calculate their motions, or visit the moon in a poetical fiction ; but will transcend spheres, soar higher yet, and see what God himself doth. The Jewish thalmodists take upon them to determine how God spends his whole time.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 255.

THEOLOGER.† n. s. [theologien, French ;

THEOLOGIAN.† s. theologus, Latin.] A divine ; a professor of divinity.

Some theologians defile places erected only for religion by defending oppressions. Hayward.
Azorius the Jesuit affirms, that it is the constant opinion of the theologers.

More against Atheism, ch. 9.

You say the theologers think to save themselves.

Wallis, Confut. of Hobbes, § 3.

They to their viands fell : nor seemingly

The angel, nor in mist, the common gloss

Of Theologians, but with keen dispatch

Of real hunger.

Milton, P. L.

THEOLOGICAL.† adj. [theologique, Fr.

THEOLOGICK.† s. theologia, Lat.] Relating to the science of divinity.

Although some pens have only symbolized the same from the mystery of its colours, yet are there other affections might admit of theological allusions.

Brown.

They generally are extracts of theological and moral sentences, drawn from ecclesiastical and other authors.

Swift.

Upon what principles does he erect his very new explication of theologic antiquity ?

Coveutry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 4.

The most considerable part for this purpose is the chapter of Laws. Of which, under its theo-logic consideration, I know of nothing so complete and masterly as the first book of Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 25.

THEOLOGICALLY.† adv. [from theological.] According to the principles of theology.

Such things as exceed the faculty and possibility of nature, are properly and theologically miracles.

Dr. Westfield, Serm. (1646), p. 90.

THEOLOGIST.† n. s. [theologus, Lat.] A THEOLOGUE.† s. divine ; one studious in the science of divinity.

The cardinals of Rome, which are theologues, friars, and schoolmen, call all temporal business, of wars, embassages, shirrery, which is under sheriffies.

Bacon, Ess.

A theologue more by need than genial bent ;

Int'rest in all his actions was discern'd.

Dryden.

It is no more an order, according to popish theologists, than the prima tonsura, they allowing only seven ecclesiastical theologists.

Attyfey, Parergon.

TO THEOLOGIZE.* v. a. [from theology.]

To render theological.

School-divinity was but Aristotle's philosophy theologized.

Glanville, Pre-exist. ch. 4.

THEOLOGY. n. s. [theologie, French ; ῥεολογία.] Divinity.

The whole drift of the Scripture of God, what it is but only to teach theology ? Theology, what it is but the science of things divine ?

Hooker.

She was most dear to the king in regard of her knowledge in languages, in theology, and in philosophy.

Hayward.

The oldest writers of theology were of this mind.

Tillotson.

THEOMACHIST. n. s. One who fights against the gods.

Bailey.

THEOMACHY.† n. s. [ῥεός and μαχη.] The fight against the gods by the giants. This is Dr. Johnson's definition from Bailey. It is used, however, for opposi- tion to the divine will.

To have all men happy or unhappy as they were our friends or enemies, and to give form to the world according to our own humours, is the true theomachy.

Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

Who can distrust or oppose this happiness of good men, so long since assured by Him, which is the Eternal God, blessed for ever ? Surely none, without the guilt of theomachy or ingratitude.

Life of Gregory ; Pref. to his Posth. (1640), A. 3.

THEORBO. n. s. [tiiorba, Italian ; tuorbe, Fr.] A large lute for playing a thorough bass, used by the Italians.

Bailey.

He wanted nothing but a song,

And a well tun'd theorbo hung

Upon a bough, to ease the pain

His tugg'd ears suffer'd with a strain.

Butler.

THEOREM.† n. s. [theoreme, French ; ῥεωρημα.]

1. A position laid down as an acknow- ledged truth.

Having found this the head theorem of all their discourses, who plead for the change of ecclesiastical government in England, we hold it necessary that the proofs thereof be weighed.

Hooker.

The chief points of morality are no less demonstrable than mathematics ; nor is the subtlety greater in moral theorems than in mathematical.

More, Div. Dialog.

Many observations go to the making up of one theorem, which, like oaks fit for durable buildings, must be of many years' growth.

Graunt.

Here are three theorems, that from thence we may draw some conclusions. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. A position proposed to be demonstrated. It is used by mathematicians in this sense as well as the other. Malone.

THEOREMATICAL. } adj. { [from theorem.]
THEOREMATICK. } Comprised in the-THEOREMICK. } orems; consisting in theorems.

Theoremick truth, or that which lies in the conceptions we have of things, is negative or positive. Grew.

THEORETICAL. } adj. { [theoretique, Fr.
THEORETICK. } from θεωρητικός;
THEORICAL. } theorique, Fr.
THEORICK. } from θεωρία.

Speculative; depending on theory or speculation; terminating in theory or speculation; not practical.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences:
So that the act and practick part of life
Must be the mistress to this theorique. Shaks.

The theoretical part of the inquiry being interwoven with the historical conjectures, the philosophy of colours will be promoted by indisputable experiments. Boyle on Colours.

For theoretical learning and sciences there is nothing yet complete. Burnet, Theory.

Admirably well turned, not only for the theoretick, but also the practical behaviour of cunning fellows. Tatler, No. 191.

THEORETICALLY. } adv. { [from theoretick.]
THEORICALLY. } [from theorick.]

Speculatively; not practically.

Able to discourse theoretically of the dimensions, situation, and motion, of the whole terrestrial globe. Boyle, St. H. Script. p. 117.

THEORICK. n. s. [from the adjective.]

Speculation, not practice.

The bookish theorick,
Wherein the toged consuls can propose
As masterly as he; meer prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldiiership. Shakspeare, Othello.

THEORIST. n. s. [from theory.] A speculatist; one given to speculation.

The greatest theorists have given the preference to such a government as that which obtains in this kingdom. Addison.

THEORY. n. s. [theorie, Fr. theoria.]

Speculation; not practice; scheme; plan or system yet subsisting only in the mind.

If they had been themselves to execute their own theory in this church, they would have seen, being nearer. Hooker.

In making gold, the means hitherto propounded to effect it are in the practice full of error, and in the theory full of unsound imagination. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Practice alone divides the world into virtuous and vicious; but as to the theory and speculation of virtue and vice, mankind are much the same. South, Serm.

True Christianity depends on fact;
Religion is not theory, but act. Harte.

THEOSOPHICAL.* } adj. { [Gr. θεός and THEOSOPHICK. } σοφία.] Divinely wise. Coles.

There is a various intertexture of theosophical and philosophical truths.

More, Conj. Cobb. (1653), p. 104.

Such noble truths and theosophick mysteries are delivered in it.

Ward, Life of Henry More, (1710), p. 128.

THERAPEUTICAL.† } adj. [therapeutique,
THERAPEUTICK. } Fr. θεραπευτικός; Gr.]

Curative; teaching or endeavouring the cure of diseases.

This remedy, in my opinion, should rather be prophylactic, for prevention of the disease, than therapeutick, for the cure of it.

Ferrand on Love Melanch. (1640), p. 336.

Therapeutick or curative physick restoreth the patient into sanity, and taketh away diseases actually affecting. Brown.

Medicine is justly distributed into prophylactic, or the art of preserving health; and therapeutick, or the art of restoring it. Watts.

THERE. adv. [thar, Gothic; ðær, Sax. daer, Dutch; der, Danish.]

1. In that place.

If they come to sojourn at my house,
I'll not be there. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Exil'd by thee from earth to deepest hell,
In brazen bonds shall barbarous discord dwell;
Gigantick pride, pale terror, gloomy care,
And mad ambition shall attend her there. Pope.

2. It is opposed to here.

To see thee fight, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Could their relishes be as different there as they are here, yet the manna in heaven will suit every palate. Locke.

Darkness there might well seem twilight here. Milton, P. L.

3. An exclamation directing something at a distance.

Your fury hardens me.
A guard there; seize her. Dryden, Aureng.

4. It is used at the beginning of a sentence with the appearance of a nominative case, but serves only to throw the nominative behind the verb: as, a man came, or, there came a man. It adds however some emphasis, which, like many other idioms in every language, must be learned by custom, and can hardly be explained. It cannot always be omitted without harshness: as, in old times there was a great king.

For reformation of error there were that thought it a part of Christian charity to instruct them. Hooker.

There are delivered in Holy Scripture many weighty arguments for this doctrine. White.

There cannot in nature be a strength so great, as to make the least moveable to pass in an instant, or all together, through the least place. Digby on the Soul.

There have been that have delivered themselves from their ills by their good fortune or virtue. Suckling.

In human actions there are no degrees described, but a latitude is indulged. Bp. Taylor.

Wherever there is sense or perception, there some idea is actually produced. Locke.

5. In composition it means that: as, thereby, by that.

THEREABOUT.† } adv. [there and about;
THEREABOUTS. } thereabouts is therefore less proper. Dr. Johnson.—Lye, with Hickes, considers there, in composition, as the genitive, dative, and ablative, of the Sax. article ðær; and thus explains thereafter by post hoc, hæc, vel ea; thereof, by de vel ex eo, ea, iis, &c. thus excluding the adverb, strictly speaking, from the several combinations. With this remark in mind, the reader will distinguish the meaning of there, where the form is stated in the derivation.]

1. Near that place.

One speech I lov'd; 'twas Aeneas's tale to Dido; and thereabout of it especially, where he speaks of Priam's slaughter. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Nearly; near that number, quantity, or state.

Between the twelfth of king John, and thirty-sixth of king Edward the Third, containing one hundred and fifty years or thereabouts, there was a continual bordering war. Davies.

Find a house to lodge a hundred and fifty persons, whereof twenty or thereabouts may be attendants. Milton.

Some three months since, or thereabout, She found me out. Suckling.

Water is thirteen times rarer, and its resistance less than that of quicksilver thereabouts, as I have found by experiments with pendulums. Newton, Opt.

3. Concerning that matter.

As they were much perplexed thereabout, two men stood by. St. Luke, xxiv. 4.

THEREAFTER.† adv. [there and after.]

1. According to that; accordingly.

When you can draw the head indifferent well, proportion the body thereafter. Peacham.

If food were now before thee set,
Would'st thou not eat? thereafter as I like The giver. Milton, P. R.

2. After that. [ðær-æfter, Sax. post hoc.]

Herself then took he by the slender waist,
In vain loud crying, and into the flood
Over the castle walle adowne her cast,
And there her drowned in the dirty mud.—
Thereafter all that mucky pelfe he tooke,
The spoile of people's evil gotten good,
The which her sire had scrap'd by hooke and crooke. Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 27.

THEREAT. adv. [there and at.]

1. At that; on that account.

Every error is a stain to the beauty of nature; for which cause it bluseth thereat, but glorieth in the contrary. Hooker.

2. At that place.

Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many go thereat. St. Matt. vii. 13.

THEREBY.† adv. [there and by.]

1. By that; by means of that; in consequence of that.

Some parts of our liturgy consist in the reading of the word of God, and the proclaiming of his law, that the people may thereby learn what their duties are towards him. Hooker.

Therewith at last he forc'd him to untie

One of his grasping feet, him to defend thereby. Spenser.

Being come to the height, they were thereby brought to an absolute necessity. Davies on Ireland.

Dare to be true; nothing can need a lie;

A fault, which needs it most, grows two thereby. Herbert.

If the paper be placed beyond the focus, and then the red colour at the lens be alternately intercepted and let pass, the violet on the paper will not suffer any change thereby. Newton.

2. Near or by that place.

There was an holy chappell edifyde,
Wherein the hermit dewly went to say
His holy things each morne and evening;
Thereby a christall streame did gently play,
Which from a sacred fontaine welled forth alway. Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 34.

THEREFORE.† adv. [there and for.
For merely accented indifferently on either syllable.]

1. For that; for this; for this reason.

This is the latest parley we will admit;
Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves.

Shakespeare.

Falstaff is dead,

And we must yern therefore. Shaks. Hen. V.

The herd that seeks after sensual pleasure is soft and unmanly; and therefore I compose myself to meet a storm.

Lucas.

2. Consequently.

He blushes; therefore he is guilty. Spectator.

The wrestlers sprinkled dust on their bodies to give better hold: the glory therefore was greater to conquer without powder.

West, Pindar.

3. In return for this; in recompence for this or for that.

We have forsaken all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore?

St. Matt. xix. 27.

4. For that purpose. Not in use.

So to his steed he got, and gan to ride
As one unfit therefore, that all might see
He had not trayned bene in chivalree.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 46.

THEREFRO'M. adv. [there and from.] From that; from this.

Be ye therefore very courageous to do all that is written in the law, that ye turn not aside therefrom, to the right hand or to the left.

Jos. xxiii. 6.

The leaves that spring therefrom grow white.

Mortimer.

THEREIN. adv. [there and in.] In that; in this.

Therein our letters do not well agree. Shaks.
The matter is of that nature, that I find myself unable to serve you therein as you desire.

Bacon.

All the earth

To thee, and to thy race, I give, as lords
Possess it, and all things that therein live.

Milton, P. L.

After having well examined them, we shall therein find many charms.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

THEREINTO. adv. [there and into.] Into that.

Let not them that are in the countries enter therein.

St. Luke, xxi. 21.

Though we shall have occasion to speak of this, we will now make some entrance therein.

Bacon.

THEREOF. adv. [there and of.] Of that; of this.

Considering how the case doth stand with this present age, full of tongue and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof.

Hooker.

'Tis vain to think that lasting which must end;
And when 'tis past, not any part remains
Thereof; but the reward which virtue gains.

Devlam.

I shall begin with Greece, where my observations shall be confined to Athens, though several instances might be brought from other states thereof.

Swift.

THEREON. adv. [there and on.] On that.

You shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thereon you rely.

Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said;
and when he thought thereon, he wept.

St. Mark, xiv. 72.

Its foundation is laid thereon.

Woodward.

THEREOUT.† adv. [there and out.] Out of that.

Thereout a strange beast with seven heads arose,
That towns and castles under her breast did cour.

Spenser.

God clave an hollow place that was in the jaw,
and there came water thereout.

Judg. xv. 19.

THEREO'. } adv. [there and to, or unto.]

THEREUNTO. } To that.

Is it in regard then of sermons only, that apprehending the gospel of Christ, we yield thereunto our unfeigned assent as to a thing infallibly true?

Hooker.

This sort of base people doth not for the most part rebel of themselves, having no heart thereunto, but are by force drawn by the grand rebels into their action.

Spenser on Ireland.

Next thereunto did grow a goodly tree,
That whereby we reason, live, and be.

Spenser.

Within ourselves, we strangers are thereto.

Davies.

A larger form of speech were safer than that which punctually prefixeth a constant day thereto.

Brown.

What might his force have done, being brought thereto,

When that already gave so much to do!

Daniel.

That it is the appointment of God, might be argument enough to persuade us thereunto.

Tillotson.

THEREUN'DER. adv. [there and under.] Under that.

Those which come nearer unto reason, find paradise under the equinoctial line, judging that thereunder might be found most pleasure and the greatest fertility.

Raleigh.

THEREUPON. adv. [there and upon.]

1. Upon that; in consequence of that.

Grace having not in one thing shewed itself, nor for some few days, but in such sort so long continued, our manifold sins striving to the contrary, what can we less thereupon conclude, than that God would at least-wise, by tract of time, teach the world, that the thing which he blesteth cannot but be of him?

Hooker.

He hopes to find you forward,
And thereupon he sends you this good news.

Shakespeare.

Let that one article rank with the rest;
And thereupon give me your daughter.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Though grants of extraordinary liberties made by a king to his subjects do no more diminish his greatness than when one torch lighteth another, yet many times inconveniencies do arise thereupon.

Davies on Ireland.

Children are chid for having failed in good manners, and have thereupon reproofs and precepts heaped upon them.

Locke.

Solon finding the people engaged in two violent factions, of the poor and the rich, and in great confusion thereupon, made due provisions for settling the balance of power.

Swift.

2. Immediately.

THEREWITH.† adv. [there and while.] At the same time. Not in use.

Of this bodily reverence of God in his church the government is moderate; God grant it be not loose therewith.

Abp. Laud, Speech in the Star-Chamber.

THEREWITH. adv. [there and with.]

1. With that.

Germany had stricken off that which appeared corrupt in the doctrine of the church of Rome, but seemed in discipline still to retain therewith very great conformity.

Hooker.

All things without, which round about we see,
We seek to know, and have therewith to do.

Davies.

Therewith at last he forc'd him to untie
One of his grasping feet, him to defend thereby.

Spenser.

2. Immediately.

THEREWITHA'L. adv. [there and withal.]

1. Over and above.

Therewithal the execrable act
On their late murder'd king they aggravate.

Well, give her that ring, and give therewithal That letter.

Shaks. Two Gent. of Verona.

3. With that.

His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewithal enwrapt the nimble thighs

Spenser.

Of his froth-foamy steed.

4. The compounds of there meaning that, and of here meaning this, have been for some time passing out of use, and are no longer found in elegant writings, or in any other than formulaary pieces.

THERF-Bread.* n. s. [vet. Angl. Boreal. derf-brode; ðærf vel ðeoff, Sax. panis azymus. Lye.] Unleavened bread. Obsolete.

The fest of therf-loaves.

Wicliffe, St. Mark, xiv. 1.

THER'RIACK.* n. s. [from ῥηριακῶν, Gr. various compositions esteemed good against poisons.] A remedy against poisons; treacle.

When the disease was young, it was mitigated with rob of elder; with crabs-eyes; spirits of hartshorn; theriac and vinegar.

The Student, ii. 344.

THER'ACAL. adj. [ῥηριακῶν, Gr. theriaca, Lat.] Medicinal; physical.

The virtuous bezoar is taken from the beast that feedeth upon the mountains, where there are theriacal herbs.

Bacon.

THERMAL.* adj. [thermal, French; from ῥεῦμα; Gr. warm.] Relating to warm baths, natural or artificial: as, thermal waters.

THERMO'METER. n. s. [thermometrie, Fr. ῥεῦμα and μέτρον.] An instrument for measuring the heat of the air, or of any matter.

The greatest heat is about two in the afternoon, when the sun is past the meridian, as is evident from the thermometer, or observations of the weather-glass.

Brown.

THERMOME'TRICAL. adj. [from thermometer.] Relating to the measure of heat.

His heat raises the liquor in the thermometrical tubes.

Cheyne.

THERMOSCOPE. n. s. [thermoscope, Fr. ῥεῦμα and σκοπεῖν.] An instrument by which the degrees of heat are discovered; a thermometer.

By the trial of the thermoscope, fishes have more heat than the element which they swim in.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

THESE, pronoun, the plural of this.† [ðar, Sax. dese, Dutch; thesser, Icel. Lye.]

1. Opposed to those, or to some others.

Did we for these barbarians plant and sow?
On these, on these our happy fields bestow?

Dryden.

2. These relates to the persons or things last mentioned; and those to the first.

More rain falls in June and July than in December and January; but it makes a much greater shew upon the earth in these months than in those, because it lies longer upon it.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

THE'SIS. n. s. [these, Fr. thesis.] A position; something laid down, affirmatively or negatively.

The truth of what you here lay down, By some example should be shown.

An honest, but a simple pair,
May serve to make this thesis clear.

Prior.

THE'SMOTHE. n. s. [thesmothete, French; διομόβητης, Gr. θεσμος and τιθεμι.] A awigger.

THE'TICAL.* adj. [from thesis.] Laid down.

This law — was merely thetical or positive, not indispensable and natural.

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653), p. 127.

THEURGICAL.* adj. [theurgique, French, THEURGICK. } from theurgy.] Relating to theurgy. See THEURGY.

All his endeavour to purge his soul by these theurgick consecrations was frustrate.

Hallywell, Melampyr. p. 51.

The reason of their calling inspiration by the names of fire, flame, flash, and the like, may be easily found in the authors of the theurgical science.

Daubuz on the Rev. edit. P. Lancaster. p. 52.

THEURGIST.* n. s. [from theurgy.] One who is addicted to theurgy.

More refined necromancers or magicians call themselves theurgists; — thinking to have to do only with good spirits. Hallywell, Melampyr. p. 50.

THEURGY.† n. s. [theurgie, Gr. theurgie, French.] The power of doing supernatural things by lawful means, as by prayer to God. This is Dr. Johnson's definition from Bailey. But the meaning also is a species of magick, in old times, which was employed in the worship of angels for their assistance to effect wonderful things.

Porphyry and some others did distinguish these two sorts, so as to condemn indeed the grosser, which they called magick or goety; but allowed the other, which they termed theurgy, as laudable and honourable, and as an art by which they received angels, and had communication with the gods. Yet St. Austin assures us, they are both damnable. Hallywell, Melampyr. (1682,) p. 51.

THEW. n. s. [þeap, Saxon.]

1. Quality; manners; customs; habit of life; form of behaviour. Obsolete.

Home report these happy news,

For well eye worthy been for wealth and gentle thewes. Spenser, F. Q.

From mother's pap I taken was unfit,
And straight deliver'd to a fairy knight,
To be upbrought in gentle thewes and martial might. Spenser, F. Q.

2. In Shakespeare it seems to signify brawn, or bulk, from the Saxon þeop, the thigh, or some such meaning.

Nature crescent does not grow alone
In thews and bulk; but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Will you tell me how to chuse a man? Care I for the limbs, the thewes, the stature, bulk and big semblance of a man? give me the spirit, master Shallow. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

THEWED.† adj. [from thew.] Educated; habituated; accustomed. Perhaps not obsolete, as Dr. Johnson would have it to be. Thewed, in our northern dialect, is docile, towards. Ray, Lye, and Grose.

But he was wise and wary of her will,
And ever held his hand upon his heart;
Yet would not seem so rude, and thewed ill,
As to despise so courteous seeming part. Spenser.

THEY.† pron. in the oblique case them, the plural of he or she. [thai, Goth. hi, Saxon.]

1. The men; the women; the persons.

They are in a most warlike preparation.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

The Spaniards

Must now confess, if they have any goodness,

The trial just and noble. Shakespeare.

They eat on beds of silk and gold,

At ivory tables, or wood sold

Dearer than it. B. Jonson, Catiline.

They know

To joy the friend and grapple with the foe.

Prior.

2. Those men; those women: opposed to some others.

Only they,

That come to hear a merry play,

Will be deceiv'd. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

'Tis remarkable, that they Talk most who have the least to say. Prior.

3. It is used indefinitely; as the French on dit.

There, as they say, perpetual night is found

In silence brooding on th' unhappy ground. Dryden.

4. [The plural of this, that, or it.] The things.

Why you keep alone?

Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died

With them they think on. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The flowers she wore along the day,

And every nymph and shepherd said,

That in her hair they lo'd more gay

Than growing in their native bed. Prior.

THIBLE. n. s. A slice; a scummer; a spatula. Ainsworth.

THICK.† adj. [þicce, Saxon; dick, Dutch; dyck, Dan. thickr, Icel.]

1. Not thin.

2. Dense; not rare; gross; crass.

God caused the wind to blow, to dry up the abundant slime of the earth, make the land more firm, and cleanse the air of thick vapours and unwholesome mists. Raleigh.

To warm milk pour spirit of nitre; the milk presently after will become thicker than it was. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Not clear; not transparent; muddy; feculent.

Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks,
And given our treasures and my rights of thee
To thick-ey'd musing and curs'd melancholy? Shakespeare.

A fermentation makes all the wine in the vessel thick or foul; but when that is past, it grows clear of itself. Temple.

Encumber'd in the mud, their oars divide
With heavy strokes the thick unwieldy tide. Addison.

4. Great in circumference; not slender.

My little finger shall be thicker than his loins.

1 Kings, xii.

Thou art waxen fat; thou art grown thick, covered with fatness. Deut. xxxii. 15.

5. Deep; noting the third dimension: as, a plank four feet long, two feet broad, and five inches thick.

6. Noting comparative bulk: as, the door was three inches thick.

7. Frequent; in quick succession; with little intermission.

They charged the defendants with their small shot and Turkey arrows as thick as hail. Knolles.

Favours came thick upon him, like main showers than sprinkling drops; he was knighted, made gentleman of the king's bed-chamber, and an annual pension given him. Wotton.

This being once a week, came too thick and too often about. Spelman.

His pills as thick as handgrana does flew,
And where they fell as certainly they slew. Roscommon.

Not thicker billows beat the Libyan main,
Nor thicker harvest on rich Hermus rise,
Than stand these troops. Dryden, Æn.

8. Close; not divided by much space; crowded.

It brought them to a hollow cave,
Amid the thickest woods. Spenser.

The people were gathered thick together.

St. Luke, xi. 29.

He fought secure of fortune as of fame;
Still by new maps the island might be shewn:
Conquests he strew'd where'er he came,
Thick as the galaxy with stars is sown. Dryden.

Objects of pain or pleasure do not lie thick enough together in life to keep the soul in constant action. Addison.

9. Not easily pervious; set with things close to each other.

He through a little window cast his sight,

Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light. Dryden.

The speedy horse

Watch each entrance of the winding wood:

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood. Dryden.

Next the proud palace of Salerno stood

A mount of rough ascent, and thick with wood. Dryden.

Bring it near some thick headed tree. Mortimer.

10. Coarse; not thin.

It tasteth a little of the wax, which in a pomegranate, or some such thick-coated fruit, it would not. Bacon.

Thick-leaved weeds amongst the grass will need more drying than ordinary grass. Mortimer.

11. Without proper intervals of articulation.

Speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,

Became the accents of the valiant,

To seem like him. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

12. Stupid.

I omit your thick error in putting no difference between a magistrate and a king.

Hayward, Answ. to Doleman, (1603,) ch. 4.

Gross-headed, thick-witted, illiterate, shallow.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymm.

13. Dull; not quick: as, thick of hearing: a colloquial expression.

14. Intimate; familiar: a vulgarism.

THICK. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The thickest part, or time when any thing is thickest.

Achimetes having with a mine suddenly blown up a great part of the wall of the Spanish station, in the thick of the dust and smook presently entered his men. Knolles.

2. A thicket; a place full of bushes.

Mists and rotten fogs
Hang in the gloomy thicks, and make unstedfast bogs. Dryden.

3. Thick and thin. Whatever is in the way.

Through perils both of wind and limb,
Through thick and thin, she follow'd him. Hudibras.

When first the down appears upon his chin,
For a small sum to swear through thick and thin. Dryden.

THICK. adv. [It is not always easy to distinguish the adverb from the adjective.]

1. Frequently; fast.

'Tis some disaster,
Or else he would not send so thick. Denham, Sophy.

I hear the trampling of thick-beating feet;
This way they move. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

2. Closely.

The neighbouring plain with arms is cover'd o'er;
The vale an iron harvest seems to yield,
Of thick sprung lances in a waving field. Dryden.

A little plot of ground thick sown, is better than a great field which lies fallow. Norris, Miscell.

3. To a great depth.

If you apply it thick spread, it will eat to the bone. Wiseman.

Cato has piercing eyes, and will discern

Our frauds, unless they're cover'd thick with art. Addison.

4. THICK and threefold. In quick succession; in great numbers.

They came thick and threefold for a time, till one experienced stager discovered the plot.

L'Estrange, Fab.

To THICK. v. n. To grow dense.

But see, the welkin thicks apace,
And stooping Phœbus steeps his face:
It's time to haste us homeward.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. March.

To THICKEN.† v. a. [diccian, Sax.]

1. To make thick.

2. To make close; to fill up interstices.

Waters evaporated and mounted up into the air, thicken and cool it. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. To condense; to make to concrete.

The white of an egg gradually dissolves by heat exceeding a little the heat of a human body; a greater degree of heat will thicken it into a white, dark-coloured, dry, viscous mass.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. To strengthen; to confirm.

'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream;
And this may help to thicken other proofs,
That do demonstrate thinly. Shaks. Othello.

5. To make frequent.

6. To make close or numerous: as, to thicken the ranks.

To THICKEN. v. n.

1. To grow thick.

2. To grow dense or muddy.

Thy lustre thickens

When he shines by. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. To concrete; to be consolidated.

Water stopt gives birth

To grass and plants, and thickens into earth.

Prior.

4. To grow close or numerous.

The press of people thickens to the court,
The impatient crowd devouring the report.

Dryden.

He saw the crowd thickening, and desired to know how many there were. Tatler.

5. To grow quick.

The combat thickens, like the storm that flies
From westward when the showery scuds arise,
Or pattering hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in harden'd rain. Dryden.

THICKET. n. s. [diccette, Saxon.] A close knot or tuft of trees; a close wood or copse.

I drew you hither,
Into the chiefest thicket of the park. Shaks.
Within a thicket I repos'd; and found
Let fall from Heav'n a sleep interminate.

Chapman.

Thus, or any of his, could not in haste creep through those desert regions, which the length of one hundred and thirty years after the flood had fortified with thickets, and permitted every bush and briar, reed and tree, to join themselves into one main body and forest. Raleigh.

How often, from the steep
Of echoing hill, or thicket, have we heard
Celestial voices, to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive, each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator! Milton, P. L.

My brothers step to the next thicket side
To bring me berries. Milton, Comus.

Now Leda's twins
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe;
Nor had they miss'd, but he to thickets fled, Conceal'd from aiming spears, not pensive to the steed. Dryden.

I've known young Juba rise before the sun,
To beat the thicket where the tyger slept,
Or seek the lion in his dreadful haunts.

Addison, Cato.

THICKLY.† adv. [from thick; Sax. diclice.]

1. Deeply; to a great quantity.

Mending cracked receivers, having thickly overlaid them with diachylon, we could not perceive leaks. Boyle.

2. Closely; in quick succession.

THICKNESS. n. s. [from thick.]

1. The state of being thick; density.

2. Quantity of matter interposed; space taken up by matter interposed.

In the darkened room, against the hole at which the light entered, I could easily see through the whole thickness of my hand the motions of a body placed beyond it. Boyle.

3. Quantity laid on quantity to some considerable depth.

Poll a tree, and cover it some thickness with clay on the top, and see what it will put forth.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Consistence; grossness; not rareness;
spissitude.

Nitre mingled with water to the thickness of honey, and anointed on the bud after the vine is cut, it will sprout forth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Diseases imagined to come from the thickness of blood, come often from the contrary cause.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

5. Imperviousness; closeness.

The banks of the river and the thickness of the shades drew into them all the birds of the country.

Addison.

6. Want of sharpness; want of quickness.

A person found in himself, being at some times subject to a thickness of hearing, the like effect.

Holder.

What you write is printed in large letters;
otherwise between the weakness of my eyes and thickness of hearing, I should lose the greatest pleasure. Swift.

THICKSCULL.* n. s. [thick and scull.] A dolt; a blockhead. Johnson, in V. Dolt.

THICKSCULLED. adj. Dull; stupid.

They're pleas'd to hear their thickscull'd judges cry,

Well mov'd! oh finely said! Dryden.

This downright fighting fool, this thickscull'd hero,

This blunt unthinking instrument of death,
With plain dull virtue has outgone my wit. Dryden.

THICKSET. adj. [thick and set.] Close planted.

His eye-balls glare with fire, suffus'd with blood,
His neck shoots up a thickset thorny wood;
His bristled back a trench impal'd appears,
And stands erected, like a field of spears. Dryden.

The world is so thickset with the numerous productions of the creatures, that besides the apparent beauty of things viewed by all, there are those secret graces in every part of nature, which some few alone have the skill to discern. Grew.

THICKSKIN. n. s. [thick and skin.] A coarse gross man; a numscull.

The shallow'st thickskin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his scene, and enter'd in a brake. Shaks.

THIEF.† n. s. [thiubs, Gothick; thief, thief, Sax. dief, Dutch. It was anciently written thief; and so appeareth to have been of two syllables; thie was wont to be taken for thrift, so that thie of it is he that takes of or from a man his thie, that is,
his thrift or means whereby he thrives.
Dr. Johnson.—Wachter and Serenius derive it from the Goth. thiwe, or thive, a servant; and illustrate this derivation by the analogy of the Latin fur, which meant a servant before it meant a thief.
The Germ. dieb is both a male or female servant, and a thief. The reason, Wachter says, of transferring the sense,

was because, in ancient times, servants were generally thieves; "quod plerique servi antiquitus essent fures domestici."
Lacombe thus also explains the old French word thieu, or thiev; "tives, domestiques, servantes: ce mot en Anglois signifie voleur."]

1. One who takes what belongs to another: the thief steals by secrecy, and the robber by violence; but these senses are confounded.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night. Shakspeare.

This he said because he was a thief, and had the bag. St. John, xii. 6.

Can you think I owe a thief my life,
Because he took it not by lawless force?
Am I obliged by that to assist his rapines,
And to maintain his murders? Dryden.

2. An excrescence in the snuff of a candle.

Where you see a thief in the candle, call presently for an extinguisher. By. Hall, Rem. p. 46.

Their burning lamps the storm ensuing show,
Th' oil sparkles, thieves about the snuff do grow.

May.

THIEF-CATCHER. } n. s. [thief and catch,
THIEF-LEADER. } lead and take.] One

THIEF-TAKER. } whose business is to detect thieves, and bring them to justice.

A wolf passed by as the thief-leaders were dragging a fox to execution.

My evenings all I would with sharpers spend,
And make the thief-catcher my bosom friend.

Bramston.

To THIEVE.† v. n. [from thief; Sax.
thiofan.] To steal; to practise theft.

THIEVERY. n. s. [from thieve.]

1. The practice of stealing; theft.

Ne how to scape great punishment and shame,
For their false treason and vile thievery. Spenser.

Do villany, do, since you profess to do't,
Like workmen; I'll example you with thievery.

Shakspeare.

He makes it a help unto thievery; for thieves having a design upon a house, make a fire at the four corners thereof, and cast thereon the fragments of loadstone, which raiseth fume.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Amongst the Spartans, thievery was a practice morally good and honest. South.

2. That which is stolen.

Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Crams his rich thievery up he knows not how.

Shakspeare.

THIEVISH.† adj. [from thief.]

1. Given to stealing; practising theft.

What, would'st thou have me go and beg my food?

Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road? Shakspeare.

O thievish night,

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd thy lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light

To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton, Comus.

The thievish god suspected him, and took
The hind aside, and thus in whispers spoke;

Discover not the theft. Addison.

2. Secret; sly; acting by stealth.

Four-and-twenty times the pilot's glass
Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass.

Shakspeare.

3. Relating to what is stolen.

By astrology he resolved thievish questions with great success; that was his utmost sole practice.

Lilly, Life, &c. p. 77.

THIEVISHLY. adv. [from thievish.] Like a thief.

They lay not to live by their worke,
But thievishly loiter and lurke. Tusser.

THIEVISHNESS. n. s. [from thievish.] Disposition to steal; habit of stealing.

THIGH. n. s. [ðeoh, Saxon; thio, Icel. die, Dutch.]

The thigh includes all between the buttocks and the knee. The thigh-bone is the longest of all the bones in the body: its fibres are close and hard: it has a cavity in its middle; it is a little convex and round on its fore-side, but a little hollow, with a long and small ridge on its backside. Quincy.

He touched the hollow of his thigh, and it was out of joint. Gen. xxxii. 25.

The flesh dissolved, and left the thigh-bone bare. Wiseman.

THILK. † pronoun. [ðilc, ðylc, ðyllc, i. e. ðyhc, the like. Lye.] That same. Obsolete.

I love thilk lass: alas, why do I love!
She deigns not my good will, but doth reprove,
And of my rural musick holdeth scorn.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

THILL. n. s. [ðille, Saxon, a piece of timber cut.] The shafts of a waggon; the arms of wood between which the last horse is placed.

More easily a waggon may be drawn in rough ways, if the fore wheels were as high as the hinder wheels, and if the thills were fixed under the axis. Mortimer.

THILL-HORSE. n. s. [thill and horse.]

THILLER. † The last horse; the horse that goes between the shafts.

Whose bridle and saddle, whilether and nall,
With collars and harness for thiller and all. Tusser.
What a beard hast thou got! thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my thill-horse has on his tail. Shakespeare.

THIMBLE. n. s. [This is supposed by Minshew to be corrupted from thumb bell.] A metal cover by which women secure their fingers from the needle when they sew.

Your ladies and pale-visag'd maids,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gantlets change,
Their needles to lances. Shakespeare, K. John.

Examine Venus and the moon,
Who stole a thimble or a spoon. Hudibras.

Veins that run perpendicular to the horizon have valves sticking to their sides like so many thimbles; which, when the blood presses back, stop its passage, but are compressed by the forward motion of the blood. Cheyne.

THIME. n. s. [thymus, Lat. thym, Fr.] A fragrant herb from which the bees are supposed to draw honey. This should be written thyme.

Fair marigolds, and bees' alluring thyme. Spenser.

THIN. † adj. [ðinn, Saxon; thunnr, Icel. dunn, Dutch.]

1. Not thick.

Beat gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires. Ezod. xxxix. 3.

2. Rare; not dense.

The hope of the ungodly is like thin froth, that is blown away with the wind. Wisd. v. 14.

In the day when the air is more thin, the sound pierceth better; but when the air is more thick, as in the night, the sound spendeth and spreadeth abroad less. Bacon.

Understand the same
Of fish within their watery residence;
Not hither summon'd, since they cannot change
Their element, to draw the thinner air.

The waters of Boristhenes are so thin and light, that they swim upon the top of the stream of the river Hypanis. Milton, P. L.

To warm new milk pour any alkali, the liquor will remain at rest, though it appears somewhat thinner. More.

3. Not close; separate by large spaces.

He pleas'd the thin and bashful audience
Of our well-meaning, frugal ancestors. Arbutnot.

Thou art weak, and full of art is he;
Else how could he that host seduce to sin,
Whose fall has left the heavenly nation thin? Roscommon.

Northward, beyond the mountains we will go,
Where rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow,
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields,
The sand no gold, the mine no silver yields. Dryden.

Thin on the towers they stand; and ev'n those few,
A feeble, fainting, and dejected crew. Dryden.

Has ravag'd more than half the globe; and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Already Caesar.

Sick with the love of fame, what throngs pour in,
Unpeople court, and leave the senate thin! Addison.

4. Not closely compacted or accumulated.
Seven thin ears blasted with the east wind sprung up. Young.

5. Exile; small.
I hear the groans of ghosts;
Thin, hollow sounds, and lamentable screams. Dryden.

6. Not coarse; not gross in substance; as, a thin veil.

7. Not abounding.
Ferrara is very large, but extremely thin of people. Addison.

8. Not fat; not bulky; lean; slim; slender.
A slim thin-gutt'd fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost, and when he had stuffed his guts well, the hole was too little to get out again. L'Estrange.

9. Slight; unsubstantial: we apply it, in colloquial language, to a person of weak mind.

Ye men that ben earthy bestes dremen away your beginning, although it be with a thin imagination. Chaucer, Boeth. B. 3. pr. 3.

A thin suspition. Ibid. B. 3. pr. 12.

THIN. adv. Not thickly.

Spain is thin-sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil and the natives being exhausted in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Remove the swelling epithets, thick laid
As varnish on a harlot's cheek; the rest
The thin-sown with aught of profit or delight. Milton, P. R.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise,
That last infirmity of noble mind,
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with the' abhorred sheers,
And slits the thin-spun life. Milton, Lycidas.

Thin-leaved arbutle hazle-graffs receives,
And planes huge apples bear that bore but leaves. Dryden.

A country gentlewoman, if it be like to rain, goes not abroad thin-clad. Locke.

To THIN. † v. a. [from the adjective;

1. To make thin or rare; to make less thick. Pr. Parv.

The serum of the blood is neither acid nor alkaline: oil of vitriol thickens, and oil of tartar thins it a little. Arbutnot.

2. To make less close or numerous.
The bill against root and branch never passed till both houses were sufficiently thinned and overawed. King Charles.

† Unload the branches, or the leaves to thin,
That suck the vital moisture of the vine. Dryden.

'Tis Caesar's sword has made Rome's senate little.

And thin'd its ranks. Addison, Cato.

3. To attenuate.
The vapours by the solar heat
Thin'd and exhal'd rise to their airy seat. Blackmore.

THINE. pronoun. [thein, Gothick; ðin, Saxon; dijn, Dutch.] Belonging or relating to thee; the pronoun possessive of thou. It is used for thy when the substantive is divided from it: as, this is thy house; thine is this house; this house is thine.

Thou hast her, France; let her be thine, for we have no such daughter. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

THING. † n. s. [ðing, Saxon; ding, Dutch and German; deduced from thun, facere, to make. See Wachter in V. Ding.]

1. Whatever is; not a person. A general word.

Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.
— You have a thing for me!
It is a common thing —
— Ha!

— To have a foolish wife. Shakespeare, Othello.
The great master he found busy in packing up his things against his departure.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.
The remnant of the meat-offering is a thing most holy. Lev. ii. 3.

Says the master, you devour the same things that they would have eaten, mice and all. L'Estrange.

When a thing is capable of good proof in any kind, men ought to rest satisfied in the best evidence for it which that kind of things will bear, and beyond which better would not be expected, supposing it were true. Wilkins.

I should blush to own so rude a thing,
As 'tis to shun the brother of my king. Dryden.

Wicked men, who understand any thing of wisdom, may see the imprudence of worldly and irreligious courses. Tillotson.

Princes, when they come to know the true state of things, are not unwilling to prevent their own ruin. Davenant.

2. It is used in contempt.

I have a thing in prose, begun above twenty-eight years ago, and almost finished: it will make a four-shilling volume. Swift.

3. It is used of persons in contempt, or sometimes with pity.

See, sons, what things you are! how quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish over-careful fathers

Have bore their sleeps with thought, their brains with care. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

A thing by neither man or woman priz'd,
And scarcely known enough to be despis'd. Dryd.

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve.

The poor thing sigh'd, and, with a blessing expressed with the utmost vehemence, turned from me. Addison.

I'll be this abject thing no more.
Love, give me back my heart again. Gronville.

4. It is used by Shakespeare once in a sense of honour.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd trueer breath: but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my wrapt heart. Shakespeare.

To THINK. v. n. preter. thought. [thank-gan, Goth. þencean, þincan, Sax. dencken, Dutch.]

1. To have ideas; to compare terms or things; to reason; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation, whether of apprehension, judgement, or illation.

Thinking, in the propriety of the English tongue, signifies that sort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active; where it, with some degree of voluntary attention, considers any thing. Locke.

What am I? or from whence? for that I am I know, because I think; but whence I came, Or how this frame of mine began to be, What other being can disclose to me? Dryden.

Those who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill, will have little matter to think on. Locke.

It is an opinion that the soul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itself constantly, and that actual thinking is as inseparable from the soul, as actual extension is from the body. Locke.

These are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon. Tillotson, Serm.

His experience of a good prince must give great satisfaction to every thinking man. Addison, Freeholder.

2. To judge; to conclude; to determine.

Let them marry to whom they think best; only to their father's tribe shall they marry. Numb. xxxvi. 6.

I fear we shall not find This long desired king such as was thought. Daniel.

Can it be thought that I have kept the gospel terms of salvation, without ever so much as intending, in any serious and deliberate manner, either to know them or keep them? Law.

3. To intend.

Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give, As one near death to those that wish him life. Shakespeare.

4. To imagine; to fancy.

Something since his coming forth is thought of, which Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger, That this return was most requir'd. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Edmund, I think, is gone, In pity of his misery, to dispatch His nighted life. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature hath provoked men to think of and observe such a thing. Burnet, Theory.

Those who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter-garden. Spectator.

5. To muse; to meditate.

You pine, you languish, love to be alone, Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh. Dryden.

6. To recollect; to observe.

We are come to have the warrant. — Well thought upon; I have it here about me. Shakespeare.

Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done. Neh. v. 19.

7. To judge; to be of opinion.

If your general acquaintance be among ladies, provided they have no ill reputation, you think you are safe. Swift.

8. To consider; to doubt; to deliberate.

Any one may think with himself, how then can any thing live in Mercury and Saturn? Bentley, Serm.

9. To THINK on. To contrive; to light upon by meditation.

Still the work was not complete, When Venus thought on a deceit. Swift, Miscell.

10. To THINK of. To estimate.

The opinions of others whom we know and think well of are no ground of assent. Locke.

- To THINK, v. a.

1. To imagine; to image in the mind; to conceive.

Charity thinketh no evil. 1 Cor. xiii. 5. Think nought a trifle, though it small appear. Young.

2. To believe; to esteem.

Nor think superfluities others' aid. Milton.

3. To THINK much. To gudge.

He thought not much to clothe his enemies Milton, P. L.

If we consider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reason to think much to sacrifice to him our dearest interests in this world. Tillotson.

4. To THINK scorn. To disdain.

He thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone. Esth. iii.

5. { Me THINKETH. It seems to me. }

- { Me THOUGHT. It appeared to me. }

These are anomalous phrases of long continuance and great authority, but not easily reconciled to grammar. In me thinketh, the verb being of the third person, seems to be referred not to the thing, and is therefore either active, as signifying to cause to think; or has the sense of seems, me thinks it seems to me. Me thought I saw the grave where Laura lay. Stevney.

Me thinketh the running of the foremost is like that of Ahimaz. 2 Sam. xviii. 27.

- THINKER. n. s. [from think.] One who thinks in a certain manner.

Nobody is made any thing by hearing of rules, or laying them up in his memory; practice must settle the habit: you may as well hope to make a good musician by a lecture on the art of music, as a coherent thinker, or strict reasoner, by a set of rules. Locke.

If a man had an ill-favoured nose, deep thinkers would impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

- THINKING. n. s. [from think.] Imagination; cogitation; judgement.

He put it by once; but, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Shaks. Jul. Cas.

If we did think His contemplations were above the earth, And fix'd on spiritual objects, he should still dwell in his musings; but I am afraid His thinkings are below the moon, nor worth His serious considering. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

I heard a bird so sing, Whose musick, to my thinking, pleas'd the king. Shakespeare.

I was a man, to my thinking, very likely to get a rich widow. Addison.

- THINLY.† adv. [from thin.]

1. Not thickly.

The wide domain Now green with grass, now gilt with grain, In russet robes of clover deep, Or thinly veil'd, and white with sheep. Shenstone.

2. Not closely; not numerously.

It is commonly opinioned, that the earth was thinly inhabited before the flood. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Our walls are thinly mann'd; our best men slain: The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching. Dryden.

- THINNESS.† n. s. [dünnēte, Saxon.]

1. The contrary to thickness; exility; tenuity.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes and sides, because of the thinness of the skin. Bacon.

Transparent substances, as glass, water, air, &c. when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherwise formed into plates, do exhibit various colours, according to their various thinness, although at a greater thickness they appear very clear and colourless. Newton, Opt.

Such depend upon a strong projectile motion of the blood, and too great thinness and delicacy of the vessels. Arbuthnot.

2. Paucity; scarcity.

The buzzard Invites the feather'd Nimrods of his race To hide the thinness of their flock from sight, And all together make a seeming goodly flight. Dryden.

In country villages pope Leo the seventh indulg'd a practice, through the thinness of the inhabitants, which opened a way for pluralities. Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. Rareness; not spissitude.

Those pleasures that spring from honour the mind can nauseate, and quickly feel the thinness of a popular breath. South.

- THIRD. adj. [driðða, Saxon.] The first after the second; the ordinal of three.

This is the third time: I hope good luck lies in odd numbers. Shakespeare.

Such clamours are like the feigned quarrels of combined cheats, to delude some third person. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

- THIRD. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The third part.

To thee and thine hereditary ever, Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakespeare.

Men of their broken debtors take a third, A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again. Shakespeare.

The protestant subjects of the abbey make up a third of its people. Addison.

No sentence can stand that is not confirmed by two-thirds of the council. Addison.

2. The sixtieth part of a second.

- THIRDBOROUGH.† n. s. [third and borough.] An under-constable.

All the wise of the hundred; Old Rasi' Clench of Hamstead, petty constable; In-and-In Medley, cooper of Islington, And headborough, with loud To-Fan the tinker Or metal-man of Belsie, the thirdborough. B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

- THIRDLY. adv. [from third.] In the third place.

First, metals are more durable than plants; secondly, they are more solid; thirdly, they are wholly subterranean. Bacon.

- To THIRL.† v. a. [ðriþlan, Saxon.] To pierce; to perforate. It is now pronounced and written thrill. Dr. Johnson.

— Not universally: thirl is still a northern word, in this sense.

- THIRST. n. s. [ðyrt, Saxon; dorst, Dutch. See To THIRST.]

1. The pain suffered for want of drink; want of drink.

But fearless they pursue, nor can the flood Quench their dire thirst; alas! they thirst for blood. Denham.

Thus accurs'd, In midst of water I complain of thirst. Dryden.

Thirst and hunger denote the state of spittle and liquor of the stomach. Thirst is the sign of an acrimony commonly alkaliescent or muriatic. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

For forty years

I've liv'd an ancho'rite in pray'r's and tears:

Yon spring, which bubbles from the mountain's side,

Has all the luxury of thirst supply'd. Harte.

2. Eagerness; vehement desire: with of, for, or after.

Not hope of praise, nor thirst of worldly good, Enticed us to follow this emprise. Fairfax.

Our thoroughsped republic of Whigs, which contains the bulk of all hoppers, pretenders, and professors, are most highly useful to princes.

Swift.

THOROUGHSTITCH. adv. [thorough and stitch.] Completely ; fully. A low word.

Perseverance alone can carry us thoroughstitch.

L'Estrange.

THORP.† n. s. [torp, Su. Goth. See also DORP.]

Thorp, thorp, threp, trep, trop, are all from the Saxon þopp, which signifies a village.

Gibson's Camden.

Within a little thorp I stay'd.

Fairfax.

THOSE. pronoun.

1. The plural of that.

Make all your trumpets speak, give them all breath,

Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death.

Shakspeare.

Sure there are poets which did never dream

Upon Parnassus, nor did taste the stream

Of Helicon ; we therefore may suppose

Those made not poets, but the poets those.

The fibres of this muscle act as those of others.

Cheyne.

2. Those refers to the former, these to the latter noun.

Neither their sighs nor tears are true,

Those idly blow, these idly fall,

Nothing like to ours at all,

But sighs and tears have sexes too.

Cowley.

THOU. pron. [ðu, Saxon ; du, Dutch ; in the oblique cases singular thee, ðe, Sax.
in the plural ye, ȝe, Saxon ; in the oblique cases plural you, eop, Saxon. You is now commonly used for the nominative plural.]

1. The second pronoun personal.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle tow'rd my hand ? Come let me clutch thee.

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight ?

Shaks. Macbeth.

I am as like to call thee so again,

To spit on thee again, to spur thee too ;

If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friend.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Thou, if there be a thou in this base town,

Who dares with angry Eupolis to frown ;

Who at enormous villany turns pale,

And steers against it with a full-blown sail.

Dryden.

2. It is used only in very familiar or very solemn language. When we speak to equals or superiors, we say you ; but in solemn language, and in addresses of worship, we say thou.

[Familiar.]

Here's to thee Dick.

Cowley.

[Solemn.]

For though in dreadful whirls we hung

High on the broken wave,

I know thou wert not slow to hear,

Nor impatient to save.

Addison.

TO THOU.† v. a. [from thou.] To treat with familiarity ; to address in a kind of contempt.

Avaunt, catyfe, dost thou thou me ?

I am come of good kynne.

Old Morality of Hyckscorner.

Taunt him with the licence of ink ; if thou thou'st him some thrice, it shall not be amiss.

Shaks.

THOUGH.† conjunction. [ðeah, Saxon ; tho, Icel. and old Swed. Mr. Tooke pronounces though the imperative of the
Sax. verb þagian, þargian, to allow. Dr.
Jamieson, however, observes that there is not the same evidence here as with respect to some other conjunctions illustrated by this acute and ingenious writer ;
and that it certainly is no inconsiderable objection to this hypothesis, that it is not supported by analogy in the other northern languages. Jamieson, in V. ALLTHOCHTE.]

1. Notwithstanding that; although.
Not that I so affirm, though so it seem.

Milton, P. L.
The sound of love makes your soft heart afraid,
And guard itself, though but a child invade.

Waller.
I can desire to perceive those things that God has prepared for those that love him, though they be such as eye hath not seen, ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive.

Locke.
Though the name of abstracted ideas is attributed to universal ideas, yet this abstraction is not great.

2. As THOUGH. As if; like as if.

In the vine were three branches; and it was as though it budded. Gen. xl. 10.

3. It is used in the end of a sentence in familiar language: however; yet.

You shall not quit Cydaria for me:
'Tis dangerous though to treat me in this sort,
And to refuse my offers, though in sport. Dryden.

A good cause would do well though;
It gives my sword an edge. Dryden, Span. Friar.

- THOUGHT.† the pret. and part. pass. of think. [ðohte, Sax. thahta, M. Goth.]

I told him what I thought. Shaks. Othello.
Are my friends embark'd?

Can any thing be thought of for their service?
Whilst I yet live, let me not live in vain. Addison.

No other tax could have been thought of, upon which so much money would have been immediately advanced. Addison.

- THOUGHT.† n. s. [from the preterite of
to think; Sax. ðeahht.]

1. The operation of the mind; the act of thinking.

The cards are dealt, and chessboards brought,
To ease the pain of coward thought. Prior.

2. Idea; image formed in the mind.
For our instruction to Milton, P. L.

Things above earthly thought.

3. Sentiment; fancy; imagery; conceit.

Thought, if translated truly, cannot be lost in another language; but the words that convey it to our apprehension, which are the image and ornament of that thought, may be so ill chosen as to make it appear unhandsome. Dryden.

One may often find as much thought on the reverse of a medal as in a canto of Spenser.

Addison on Medals.
Thoughts come crowding in so fast upon me,
that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject.

Dryden.
The thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking.

One only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought.

4. Reflection; particular consideration.
Why do you keep alone?

Of sorrier fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on. Shaks. Macbeth.

5. Conception; preconceived notion.
Things to their thought

So unimaginable as hate in heaven. Milton, P. L.

6. Opinion; judgement.
He that is ready to slip, is as a lamp despised in the thought of him that is at ease. Job, xii. 5.

They communicated their thoughts on this subject to each other; and therefore their reasons are little different. Dryden.

Thus Bethel spoke, who always speaks his thought,
And always thinks the very thing he ought. Pope.

7. Meditation; serious consideration.
Pride, of all others the most dangerous fault,
Proceeds from want of sense or want of thought.

Roscommon.

8. Design; purpose.

The thoughts I think towards you are thoughts of peace, and not evil. Jer. xxix. 11.
Nor was godhead from her thought.
Milton, P. L.

9. Silent contemplation.

Who is so gross
That cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold, but says, he sees it not?
Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought.
Shakspeare.

10. Solitude; care; concern.

Let us return, lest he leave caring for the asses,
and take thought for us. 1 Sam. ix. 5.
Hawis was put in trouble, and died with thought and anguish before his business came to an end.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

Adam took no thought, eating his fill.
Milton, P. L.

11. Expectation.
The main descry

Stands on the hourly thought. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

12. A small degree; a small quantity. It seems a loose term, but is used by good writers.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetries would allow. Sidney.

If our own be but equal, the law of common indulgence alloweth us to think them at the least half a thought the better, because they are our own.
Hooker.

A needle pierced through a globe of cork, cut away by degrees, will swim under water, yet not sink unto the bottom: if the cork be a thought too light to sink under the surface, the water may be attenuated with spirits of wine. Brown.

My giddiness seized me, and though I now totter, yet I think I am a thought better. Swift.

- THOUGHTFUL. adj. [thought and full.]

1. Contemplative; full of reflection; full of meditation.

On these he mus'd within his thoughtful mind,
And then resolv'd what Faunus had divin'd.
Dryden.

2. Attentive; careful.

Thoughtful of thy gain, I all the live-long day
Consume in meditation deep. Philips.

3. Promoting meditation; favourable to musing.

War, horrid war, your thoughtful walks invades,
And steel now glitters in the muses' shades.
Pope.

4. Anxious; solicitous.

In awful pomp, and melancholy state,
See settled reason on the judgment-seat;
Around her crowd distrust, and doubt, and fear,
And thoughtful foresight, and tormenting care.

Prior.

- THOUGHTFULLY. adv. [from thoughtful.]
With thought or consideration; with solicitude.

- THOUGHTFULNESS.† n. s. [from thoughtful.]

1. Deep meditation.

Suitable to the gravity of a Spaniard, or the silence and thoughtfulness of an Italian.

Swift, Esam. No. 32.

While the nervous fibres preserve their due tension and firmness, and the spirits are transmitted to them from the brain, endowed with due strength, swiftness, and vivacity, and suffered to attend their duty, without the avocations of thoughtfulness, and intense contemplation, the concoction of the meats is well performed. Blackmore.

2. Anxiety; solicitude.

- THOUGHTLESS. adj. [from thought.]

1. Airy; gay; dissipated.

2. Negligent; careless.

It is something peculiarly shocking to see gay hairs without remorse for the past, and thoughtless of the future. Rogers.

3. Stupid; dull.

His goodly fabrick fills the eye,
And seems design'd for thoughtless majesty:
Thoughtless as monarch oaks that shade the plain,
And spread in solemn state supinely reign.
Dryden.

- THOUGHTLESSLY. adv. [from thought.]
Without thought; carelessly; stupidly

In restless hurries thoughtlessly they live,
At substance oft unmov'd, for shadows grieve.
Garth.

- THOUGHTLESSNESS.† n. s. [from thoughtless.] Want of thought; absence of thought.

What is called absence, is a thoughtlessness and want of attention about what is doing.

Ld. Chesterfield.

- THOUGHTSICK. adj. [thought and sick.]
Uneasy with reflection.

Heaven's face doth glow
With trifling visage; and, as 'gainst the doom,
Is thoughtsick at the act. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

- THOUSAND.† adj. or n. s. [ðurenþ,
Saxon; thund, Icel. from tiu, Icel.
ten, and, hund, M. Goth. hundred. Serenius.]

About three thousand years ago, navigation of the world for remote voyages was greater than at this day. Bacon.

2. Proverbially, a great number.
So fair, and thousand, thousand times more fair
She seem'd, when she presented was to sight.

Spenser.
For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd,
Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd.

Dryden.

Search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree,
Drawn from the root of some old Tuscan tree,
And thou, a thousand off, a fool of long degree.

Dryden.

Though he regulates himself by justice, he finds at thousand occasions for generosity and compassion. Addison, Spect.

How many thousands pronounce boldly on the affairs of the publick, whom God nor men never qualified for such judgment! Watts.

- THOUSANDTH. adj. [from thousand.] The hundredth ten times told; the ordinal of a thousand: proverbially, very numerous.

He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but a part of a thousandth part in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapt him o' th' shoulder, but I'll warrant him heart whole. Shaks. As you like it.

Such is the poet's lot: what luckier fate
Does on the works of grave historians wait?

More time they spend, in greater toils engage,
Their volumes swell beyond the thousandth page.

Dryden.

The French Hugonots are many thousand with nesses to the contrary; and I wish they deserve the thousandth part of the good treatment they have received. Swift, Miscel.

- THOWL.† n. s. [ðol, Saxon; scalmus, quo pendet remus.] Lye. One of two small sticks or wooden pins, driven into the edge of a boat, by which oars are

To THRACK.† v. a. [tracht, a load, German; from tragen, to carry.] To load to burthen.

Certainly we shall one day find, that the straight is too narrow for any man to come bustling in, thrack'd with great possessions and greater corruptions.

South, Serm. viii. 176.

THRALL.† n. s. [ðræl, þall, Sax. thrael, Icel. a bond-servant. Mr. Ellis considers it as derived from the Saxon þrallan, to bore; and refers to Exod. xxi. 6. þrille, hij eape mib anum æle, "drill his ear with an awl; a custom retained by our forefathers, and executed on their slaves at the church door." Specimens of the Early Engl. Poets, vol. i. p. 20.]

1. A slave; one who is in the power of another. Not much in use.

No thralls like them that inward bondage have.

Sidney.

But sith she will the conquest challenge need,
Let her accept me as her faithful thrall.
Look gracious on thy prostrate thrall.
The two delinquents

That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep.
I know I'm one of nature's little kings;
Yet to the least and vilest things am thrall.
That may so suffice his vengeful ire,
Or do him mightier service, as his thralls
By right of war, whate'er his business be.

Milton, P. L.

2. Bondage; state of slavery or confinement.
Her men took land,
And first brought forth Ulysses, bed, and all
That richly furnish'd it; he still in thrall
Of all-subduing sleep.
And laid about him, till his nose
From thrall of ring and cord broke loose.

Hudibras.

THRALL.* adj. Bond; subject.
Withstood
The fiend that you would maken thrall and bond.
[He] made her person thrall unto his beastly kind.
Greatest kings
Are thrall to change as well as weaker things.

To THRALL. v. a. [from the noun.]
To enslave; to bring into the power of another. Out of use.
Let me be a slave t' achieve the maid,
Whose sudden sight hath thrall'd my wounded eye.
Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode
The bad with bad, a spider with a toad.
For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will.
The author of nature is not thrall'd to the laws of nature.

THRALDOM. n. s. [from thrall.] Slavery; servitude.
How far am I inferior to thee in the state of the mind! and yet know it hat all the heavens cannot bring me to such thraldom.
He swore with sobs,
That he would labour my delivery.
— Why so he doth, when he delivers you
From this earth's thraldom to the joys of heav'n.
This country, in a great part desolate, groaneth under the Turkish thraldom.
He shall rule, and she in thraldom live.
They tell us we are all born slaves; life and thraldom we entered into together, and can never be quit of the one till we part with the other.

Locke.

THRANG.* See THRONG.
THRAPPLE. n. s. The windpipe of any animal. They still retain it in the Scottish dialect; we say rather throttle.

To THRASH.† v. a. [ðæpʁan, Saxon; derschen, Dutch; therskia, Icel. Our word is written thrash or thresh; but, according to the etymology, thresh is most correct.]

1. To beat corn to free it from the chaff.
First thrash the corn, then after burn the straw.

Shakspeare.

Gideon threshed wheat to hide it. Judg. viii. 11.
Here be oxen for burnt sacrifice, and threshing instruments for wood.

2 Sam. xxiv. 22.

In the sun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out, and winnow it by day.
This is to preserve the ends of the bones from an incalcescence, which they being hard bodies would contract from a swift motion; such as that of running or threshing.

Ray.

Out of your clover well dried in the sun, after the first threshing, get what seed you can. Mortimer.

2. To beat; to drub.
Thou scurvy valiant ass; thou art here but to thrash Trojans, and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit like a Barbarian slave.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

I have been thrash'd, i' faith.

— How? thrash'd, sir? — Never was Shrove-Tuesday bird
So cudgell'd, gentlemen.

Beaumont and Fl. Nice Valour.

To THRASH. v. n. To labour; to drudge.
I rathe would be Mævius, thresh for rhimes
Like his, the scorn and scandal of the times,
Than that Philippick fatally divine,
Which is inscrib'd the second, should be mine.

Dryden.

THRA'SHER. n. s. [from thrash.] One who thrashes corn.

Our soldiers, like a lazy thresher with a flail,
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.

Shakspeare.

Not barely the plowman's pains, the reaper's and thresher's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat: the labour of those employed about the utensils must all be charged.

Locke.

THRA'SHINGFLOOR. n. s. An area on which corn is beaten.

In vain the binds the thrashing-floor prepare,
And exercise their flails in empty air.
Delve of convenient depth your thrashing-floor
With temper'd clay, then fill and face it o'er.

Dryden.

THRASO'NICAL.† adj. [from Thraso, a boaster in old comedy.] Boastful; bragging.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thraso'nical.

Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

Threepil'd hyperboles; spruce affectation.

Shakspeare.

THRE'SCORE. adj. [three and score.] Thrice twenty; sixty.

Threescore and ten I can remember well.

Shakspeare.

Their lives before the flood were abbreviated after, and contracted unto hundreds and threescore.

Brown.

By chase our long-liv'd fathers earn'd their

food;

Toil strung the nerves, and purify'd the blood:

But we their sons, a pamper'd race of men,

Are dwindled down to threescore years and ten.

Dryden.

THRENE.* n. s. [θρηνη, Gr.] Lamentation; complaint. Obsolete.

It made this threne

To the phenix and the dove,

As chorus to their tragick scene.

Shakspeare, Pass. Pilgrim.

Some of these psalms may serve as threnes and dirges to lament the present miseries.

Bp. King to Adp. Usher, Lett. p. 567.

We observe the threnes and sad accents of the prophet Jeremy, when he wept for the sins of his nation.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651), p. 56.

The birds shall mourn, and change their song into threnes and sad accents.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1653), p. 12.

THRE'NODY.† n. s. [θρηνηδια.] A song of lamentation.

The most powerful eloquence is the threnody of a broken heart.

Farindon, Serm. (1647), p. 34.

They carry the body to the grave;—and for seven days the next of kin watch, to keep if possible the evil angel from his grave; incessantly warbling out elegiac threnodies, as the last expression of love they can shew.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 308.

To THRESH.† v. a. [ðreapcan, ðreapcan, Saxon.] See To THRASH.† To beat corn to free it from the chaff.

Gideon was taken from threshing, as well as Cincinnatus from the plough, to command armies.

Locke on Education.

THRE'SHER.† n. s. [ðæppesce, Sax.]

1. One who threshes corn.

Here too the thresher brandishing his flail,

Bespeaks a master.

Doddley.

2. A fish; the sea-fox.

The flail-finn'd thresher, and steel-beak'd sword-fish.

Donne, Poems, p. 306.

THRE'SHINGFLOOR.† n. s. An area on which corn is beaten.

The careful ploughman doubting stands,

Lest on the threshing-floor his sheaves prove chaff.

Milton, P. L.

THRE'SHOLD. n. s. [ðæppscald, Sax.] The ground or step under the door; entrance; gate; door.

Fair marching forth in honourable wise,
Him at the threshold met she well did enterprize.

Spenser.

Many men, that stumble at the threshold,

Are well foretold that danger lurks within.

Shaks.

Not better

Than still at hell's dark threshold to have set watch,

Unnam'd, undreaded, and thyself half starv'd.

Milton, P. L.

Before the starry threshold of Jove's court

My mansion is, where those immortal shapes

Of bright aerial spirits live insper'd

In regions mild of calm and serene air.

Milton, Comus.

There sought the queen's apartment, stood before

The peaceful threshold, and besieg'd the door.

Dryden.

THREW, preterite of throw.

A broken rock the force of Pyrrhus threw:

Full on his ankle fell the pond'rous stone,

Burst the strong nerves, and crash'd the solid bone.

Pope.

THRICE. adv. [from three.]

1. Three times.

Thrice he assay'd it from his foot to draw,

And thrice in vain to draw it did assay,

It bootied nought to think, to rob him of his prey.

Spenser.

Thrice within this hour

I saw him down; thrice up again and fighting.

Shakspeare.

Thrice did he knock his iron teeth; thrice howl,

And into frowns his wrathful forehead rowl.

Cowley.

2. A word of amplification.

Thrice noble lord, let me intreat you

To pardon me.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Thrice and four times happy those

That under Ilian walls before their parents dy'd.

Dryden.

To THRID.† v. a. [this is corrupted from thread; in French enfiler.] To slide through a narrow passage.

Thridding back

That well-known way where I had made a track.

Fanshawe, Tr. of Past. Fido, p. 1.
One gains the thicket, and one thrides the brake.

Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair,
Some hang upon the pendants of her ear. Pope.

THRID.* n. s. Thread.

Sad Clotho held the rocke the whiles the thrid
By grisly Lachesis was spun with paine,
That cruell Atropos eftsomnes undid,
With cursed knife cutting the twist in twaine:
Most wretched men whose dayes depend on thrids
so vaine. Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 48.

THRIFT.† n. s. [from thrive.]

Profit; gain; riches gotten; state of prospering.

He came out with all his clowns, horst upon such cart jades, and so furnished, as I thought with myself if that were thrift, I wisht none of my friends or subjects ever to thrive. Sidney.

You some permit

To second ill with ill, such worse than other,
And make them dreaded to the doer's thrift.
Shakspeare.

Had I but the means

To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind presages me such thrift,
That I should be fortunate. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

Should the poor be flatter'd?

No; let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Shaks. Hamlet.
Parsimony; frugality; good husbandry.

The rest, unable to serve any longer, or willing to fall to thrift, prove very good husbands.

Spenser on Ireland.

Out of the present sparing and untimely thrift, there grow many inconveniences and continual charge in repairing and re-edifying such imperfect slight-built vessels. Raleigh.

Thus Heaven, though all-sufficient, shows a thrift in his economy, and bounds his gift. Dryden.

A plant.

The margyold above, to adorn the arched bar;
The double dayzie, thrift, the button-bachelor;
Drayton, Polyoth. S. 15.

THRIFTILY.† adv. [from thriftily.] Frugally; parsimoniously; carefully; with good husbandry.

Preserve it tenderly and thriftily; fence it against sun, dust, air, and fire.

Jy. T aylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 102.

Cromartie after fourscore went to his countryhouse to live thriftily, and save up money to spend at London. Swift.

THRIFTINESS. n. s. [from thriftily.] Frugality; husbandry.

If any other place you have,
Which asks small pains but thriftiness to save.

Spenser.

Some are censured for keeping their own, whom tenderness how to get honestly teacheth to spend discreetly; whereas such need no great thriftiness in preserving their own, who assume more liberty in exacting from others. Wotton.

THRIFTESS. adj. [from thrift.] Profuse; extravagant.

They in idle pomp and wanton play
Consumed had their goods and thriftless hours,
And thrown themselves into these heavy stowers.
Spenser.

He shall spend mine honour with his shame,
As thriftless sons their scraping father's gold.

Shakspeare.

THRIFTY. adj. [from thrift.]

Frugal; sparing; not profuse; not lavish.

Though some men do, as do they would,
Let thriftily do, as do they should. Tusser.

Nature never lends

The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But like a thriftily goddess she determines Herself the glory of a creditor,
Thanks and use. Shakspeare.

Lest he should neglect his studies
Like a young heir, the thriftily goddess,
For fear young master should be spoil'd,
Would use him like a younger child. Swift.

I am glad he hath so much youth and vigour left, of which he hath not been thriftily; but wonder he has no more discretion. Swift.

2. Well husbanded.

I have five hundred crowns,

The thriftily hire I sav'd under your father. Shaks.

To THRILL. v. a. [ðjʊlɪn, Sax. drilla, Swedish.] To pierce; to bore; to penetrate; to drill.

The cruel word her tender heart so thrill'd,
That sudden cold did run through every vein,
And stormy horror all her senses fill'd
With dying fit, that down she fell for pain. Spenser.

He pierced through his chaffed chest
With thrilling point of deadly iron brand,
And lanc'd his lordly heart. Spenser.

A servant that be bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act; bending his sword
To his great master. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Nature, that heard such sound,
Beneath the hollow round
Of Cynthia's seat, the airy region thrilling,
Now was almost won,
To think her part was done. Milton, Ode.

To THRILL. v. n.

1. To have the quality of piercing.
The knight his thrilliant spear again essay'd,
In his brass-plated body to emboss. Spenser.

With that, one of his thrillants darts he threw,
Headed with ire and vengeable despite. Spenser.

2. To pierce or wound the ear with a sharp sound.

The piteous maiden, careful, comfortless,
Does throw out thrilling shrieks, and shrieking cries. Spenser.

3. To feel a sharp tingling sensation.

To seek sweet safety out,
In vaults and prisons; and to thrill and shake,
Ev'n at the crying of our nation's crow,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman. Shaks.
Art thou not horribly afraid? Doth not thy blood thrill at it? Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

4. To pass with a tingling sensation.

A faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shaks.

A sudden horror chill
Ran through each nerve, and thrill'd in ev'ry vein.
Addison.

THRILL.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The breathing place or hole.
The bill of the dodo hooks and bends downwards; the thrill or breathing-place is in the midst.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

2. A piercing sound.

To THRING.* v. a. [ðrɪŋɡən, Sax.] To press; to thrust: still used in some parts of the north. It is, in fact, no other than throng; and in our old language, is both active and neuter.

In his sleeve he gan to thring
A razor sharpe and wel byting. Chaucer, Rom. R.
There was many a bird singing,
Throughout the yerde all thringing. Ibid.

To THRIVE.† v. n. pret. throve, and sometimes less properly thrived, part.
thriven. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory etymology: in the northern dialect they use throdden, to make grow; perhaps throve was the original word, from throa, Icelandic, to en-crease. Dr. Johnson.—But see Spegel, Gloss. Su. Goth. in V. TRIFWAS, where he introduces our thrive; and trifnað, thrift or thriving. Serenius also notices trifwas, as well as the Icel. thryfast, benè valere, vigere, et throa, augere.]

To prosper; to grow rich; to advance in any thing desired.

The better thou thrivest, the gladder am I.

Tusser.

If lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
Dismiss his power he means to visit us. Shaks.

It grew amongst bushes, where commonly plants do not thrive. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They by vices thrive,

Sail on smooth seas, and at their port arrive.

Sandys.

O son! why sit we here, each other viewing
Idly, while Satan, our great author, thrives
In other worlds, and happier seat provides
For us, his offspring dear? Milton, P. L.

Those who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, seldom embark all their hopes in one bottom. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Growth is of the very nature of some things:
to be and to thrive is all one with them; and they know no middle season between their spring and their fall. South.

Experienc'd age in deep despair was lost,
To see the rebel thrive, the loyal crost. Dryden.

Seldom a thriving man turns his land into money to make the greater advantage. Locke.

The thriven calves in meads their food forsake,
And render their sweet souls before the piteous rack. Dryden, Virg.

A little hope—but I have none.
On air the poor camellions thrive,

Deny'd ev'n that my love can live. Granville.

Such a care hath always been taken of the city charities, that they have thriven and prospered gradually from their infancy, down to this very day.

Atterbury, Serm.

In the fat age of pleasure, wealth, and ease, Sprung the rank weed, and thriv'd with large increase. Pope, Ess. on Criticism.

Diligence and humility is the way to thrive in the riches of the understanding, as well as in gold.

Watts, Logic.

Personal pride, and affection, a delight in beauty, and fondness of finery, are tempers that must either kill all religion in the soul, or be themselves killed by it; they can no more thrive together, than health and sickness. Law.

THRIVER. n. s. [from thrive.] One that prosper; one that grows rich.

He had so well improved that little stock his father left, as he was like to prove a thriver in the end. Hayward.

THRIVINGLY. adv. [from thriving.] In a prosperous way.

THRIVING.* } n. s. Growth; increase.

THRIVINGNESS. }
A careful shepherd not only turns his flock into a common pasture, but with particular advertence observes the thriving of every one.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

THRO'. contracted by barbarians from through.

What thanks can wretched fugitives return,
Who scatter'd thro' the world in exile mourn?

Dryden.

THROAT. n. s. [ðrəʊt, θrəʊtə, Sax.]

1. The forefront of the neck; the passages of nutriment and breath.

The gold, I give thee, will I melt and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shakspeare.

Wherefore could I not pronounce, amen?

I had most need of blessing, and amen
Stuck in my throat. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Larissa's gutturals convuls'd his throat;
He smooth'd his voice to the Bizantine note.

Harle.

2. The main road of any place.

Her honour, and her courage try'd,
Calm and intrepid in the very thro'
Of sulphurous war, on Tenier's dreadful field.

Thomson.

3. To cut the THROAT. To murder; to kill by violence.

These bred up amongst the Englishmen, when they become kern, are made more fit to cut their throats.

Spenser.

A trumpeter that was made prisoner, when the soldiers were about to cut his throat, says, why should you kill a man that kills nobody?

L'Estrange.

THRO'ATPIPE. n. s. [throat and pipe.] The weasand; the windpipe.

THRO'ATWORT.† n. s. [throat and wort;
digitalis.] A plant. Dr. Johnson.—
The right botanical name is trachelium:
it is also called fox cardinalis. Mason.

My muse grows hoarse, and can no longer sing,
But throatwort haste her kind relief to bring:
The colleges with dignity enstall
This flower, at Rome he is a cardinal.

Tate's Cowley.

THRO'ATY.* adj. [from throat.] Guttural.
The conclusion of this rambling letter shall be a rhyme of certain hard throaty words.

Howell, Lett. ii. 71.

To THROB. v. n. [from θροῦν, Minshew and Junius; formed in imitation of the sound, Skinner; perhaps contracted from throw up.]

1. To heave; to beat; to rise as the breast with sorrow or distress.

Here may his head live on my throbbing breast.

Shakespeare.

My heart throbs to know one thing:
Shall Banquo's issue ever reign?

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

'Twas the clash of swords: my troubled heart
Is so cast down, and sunk amidst its sorrows,
It throbs with fear, and akes at every sound.

Addison.

How that warm'd me! How my throbbing heart
Leapt to the image of my father's joy,
When you should strain me in your folding arms!

Smith.

2. To beat; to palpitate.

In the depending orifice there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneurism, the blood being choked in by the contused flesh.

Wiseman, Surgery.

THROB. n. s. [from the verb.] Heave;
beat; stroke of palpitation.

She sigh'd from bottom of her wounded breast,
And after many bitter throbs did throw,
With lips full pale, and fault'ring tongue oppress.

Spenser.

Thou talk'st like one who never felt
Th' impatient throbs and longings of a soul,
That pants and reaches after distant good.

Addison, Cato.

To THRO'DDEN.† v. n. To grow; to thrive; to encrease. North. Grose. See To THRIVE.

THROE. n. s. [from θροῖαν, to suffer,
Saxon.]

1. The pain of travail; the anguish of bringing children: it is likewise written throw.

Lucina lent not me her bed,
But took me in my throws. Shaks. Cymbeline.

His persuasive and practical tract, which was exceeding agreeable to his desires, cost him most throws and pangs of birth. Fell, Life of Hammond.

My womb pregnant, and now excessive grown,
Prodigious motion felt and rueful throes.

Milton, P. L.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pain,
My throes come thicker, and my cries increase'd.

Dryden.

Reflect on that day, when earth shall be again in travail with her sons, and at one fruitful thro' bring forth all the generations of learned and un-learned, noble and ignoble dust. Rogers, Sermon.

2. Any extreme agony; the final and mortal struggle.

O man! I have mind of that most bitter thro',
For as the tree does fall, so lies it ever low.

Spenser.

To ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love, with other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will do
Some kindness to them. Shakespeare, Timon.

To THROE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in agonies.

The setting of thine eye and cheek proclaim a birth,
Which throes thee much to yield. Shaks. Tempest.

THRONE.† n. s. [throne, old French;
thronus, Lat. θρόνος, Gr.]

1. A royal seat; the seat of a king.

Boundless intemperance hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
The Eternal Father from his throne beheld
Their multitude. Milton, P. L.
Stonehenge, once thought a temple, you have found

A throne where kings were crown'd. Dryden.
We have now upon the throne a king willing and able to correct the abuses of the age. Davenant.

2. The seat of a bishop.

Bishops preached on the steps of the altar standing, having not as yet assumed the state of a throne.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. One highly exalted; spoken of angelical beings.

Still would those beauteous ministers of light
Burn all as bright,
And bow their flaming heads before thee;
Still thrones and dominations would adore thee.

Crashaw, Poems, p. 177.

Hear, all ye angels, progeny of light,
Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, powers.
Milton, P. L.

To THRONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To enthone; to set on a royal seat.

They have, as who have not, whom their great stars

Thron'd and set high? Shakespeare.
True image of the Father, whether thron'd
In the bosom of bliss, and light of light
Conceiving, or remote from heaven, enstrin'd
In fleshly tabernacle and human form.

Milton, P. R.

He thron'd in glass and nam'd it Caroline.

Pope.

THRONG. n. s. [θpanz, Saxon, from θpun-gan, to press.] A crowd; a multitude pressing against each other.

Let us on heaps go offer up our lives:
We are enow yet living in the field,
To smother up the English in our throngs. Shaks.

A throng

Of thick short sobs in thundering volleys float,
And roul themselves over her lubrick throat
In panting murmurs.

Crashaw.

This book, the image of his mind,
Will make his name not hard to find.
I wish the throng of great and good
Made it less easily understood. Waller.

With studious thought observ'd the illustrious throngs.

In nature's order as they pass'd along,
Their names, their fates. Dryden, Æn.

THRONG.* adj. Much occupied; very busy: a northern expression, sometimes spoken thrang. In the following example, it means filled with multitudes.

I demand what perfection can be in the spirits of these just men to be overwhelmed in a senseless sleep; or what a disproportionable and unsuitable representation it is of this throng theatre in heaven, made up of saints and angels, that so great a part of them as the souls of the holy men deceased should be found drooping or quite drowned in an unactive lethargy?

More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 28.

To THRONG. v. n. [from the noun.] To crowd; to come in tumultuous multitudes.

I have seen

The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind
To hear him speak. Shakespeare, Coriol.

His mother could not longer bear the agitations of so many passions as throng'd upon her, but fell upon his neck, crying out, My son! Tatler.

To THRONG. v. a. To oppress or incommode with crowds or tumults.

I'll say thou hast gold:

Thou wilt be throng'd too shortly. Shakespeare.
The multitude throng thee and press thee.

St. Luke, viii. 45.

All access was throng'd, the gates Thick swarm'd. Milton, P. L.

THRO'NGLY.* adv. [from throng.] In crowds; in multitudes.

God had so contrived, by his infinite wisdom, that matter, thus or thus prepared, should by a vital congruity attract proportional forms from the world of life, which is every where rich at hand, and does very throngly inebriate the moist and unctuous
air.

More, Conf. Cabb. (1653,) p. 37.

THRO'STLE. n. s. [θροστλε, Saxon.] The thrush; a singing bird.

The thrush with his note so true,
The wren with his little quill. Shakespeare.

The black-bird and throset with their melodious voices bid welcome to the cheerful spring.

Walton, Angler.

THRO'TTLE. n. s. [from throat.] The windpipe; the larinx.

At the upper extreme it hath no larinx or throtle to qualify the sound. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To THRO'TTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To choak; to suffocate; to kill by stopping the breath.

I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accents in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off.

Shakespeare.

As when Anteus in Trassa strove
With Jove's Alcides, and oft foil'd still rose,
Receiving from his mother earth new strength,
Fresh from his fall and fiercer grapple join'd,
Throttled at length in the air, expir'd and fell.

Milton, P. R.

His throat half throttled with corrupted phlegm,
And breathing through his jaws a belching steam.

Dryden.

The throttling quinsy 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatism I send to rack the joints.

Dryden.

Throttle thyself with an ell of strong tape,
For thou hast not a groat to atone for a rape.

Swift.

THROVE. the preterite of thrive.
England never throve so well, nor was there everbrought into England so great an increase of wealth since. Locke.

THROUGH.† prep. [ðuph, Saxon; door, Dutch; durch, German; thairh, Goth. Dicitur de transitu per locum in omnibus dialectis. Wachter. Mr. Tooke derives it from the Goth. substantive dauro, (Teut. thuruh, the same,) a door, gate, passage.]

Made France and Spain ambitious of his love. Dryden.

2. Noting passage.

Through the gate of ivory he dismiss'd
His valiant offspring. Dryden, Æn.

The same thing happened when I removed the prism out of the sun's light, and looking through it upon the hole shining by the light of the clouds beyond it. Newton.

3. By transmission.

Through these hands this science has passed with great applause. Temple.

Material things are presented only through their senses; they have a real influx on these, and all real knowledge of material things is conveyed into the understanding through these senses.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

4. By means of; by agency of; in consequence of.

The strong through pleasure soonest falls, the weak through smart. Spenser.

Something you may deserve of him through me. Shakespeare.

By much slothfulness the building decayeth, and through idleness of the hands the house droppeth through. Ecclus. x.

You will not make this a general rule to debar such from preaching the gospel, as have through infirmity fallen. Whitgift.

Some through ambition, or through thirst of gold, Have slain their brothers, and their country sold. Dryden.

To him, to him 'tis giv'n
Passion, and care, and anguish to destroy;
Through him soft peace and plenitude of joy
Perpetual o'er the world redeem'd shall flow. Prior.

THROUGH. adv.

1. From one end or side to the other.

You'd be so lean, that blasts of January
Would blow you through and through. Shaks.

Inquire how metal may be tinged through and through, and with what, and into what colours? Bacon.

Pointed satire runs him through and through. Oldham.

To understand the mind of him that writ, is to read the whole letter through, from one end to the other. Locke.

2. To the end of any thing; to the ultimate purpose; to the final conclusion.

Every man brings such a degree of this light into the world with him, that though it cannot bring him to heaven, yet it will carry him so far, that if he follows it faithfully he shall meet with another light, which shall carry him quite through. South.

THROUGHRED. adj. [through and bred, commonly throughbred.] Completely educated; completely taught.

A through-bred soldier weighs all present circumstances, and all possible contingents. Grew, Cosmol.

THROUGHLIGHTED. adj. [through and light.] Lighted on both sides.

That the best pieces be placed where are the fewest lights; therefore not only rooms windowed on both ends, called throughlighted, but with two or more windows on the same side, are enemies to this art. Wotton on Architecture.

THROUGHLY. adv. [from through.] It is commonly written thoroughly, as coming from through.]

1. Completely; fully; entirely; wholly.

The sight so thoroughly him dismay'd,

That nought but death before his eyes he saw. Spenser.

For bed then next they were,
All thoroughly satisfied with compleat cheer. Chapman.

Rice must be thoroughly boiled in respect of its hardness. Bacon.

No less wisdom than what made the world can thoroughly understand so vast a design. Tillotson.

2. Without reserve; sincerely.

Though it be somewhat singular for men truly and thoroughly to live up to the principles of their religion, yet singularity in this is a singular commendation. Tillotson.

THROUGHOUT. prep. [through and out.]

Quite throughout; in every part of.

Thus it fareth even clean throughout the whole controversy about that discipline which is so earnestly urged. Hooker.

There followed, after the defeat, an avoiding of all Spanish forces throughout Ireland. Bacon.

O for a clap of thunder, as loud

As to be heard throughout the universe,

To tell the world the fact, and to applaud it. B. Jonson.

Impartially inquire how we have behaved ourselves throughout the course of this long war. Atterbury.

THROUGHOUT. adv. Every where; in every part.

Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold still be tormented in the sea of this world with the thunderings of Antichrist.

Bp. Hooper, Confess. of Chr. Faith, (1584,) § 52.

THUNDEROUS, † adj. [from thunder.] Producing thunder.

Rushing with thunderous roar.

Sylvester, Du Bart. (1621,) p. 420.

Look in and see each blissful deity,
How he before the thunderous throne doth lie.

Milton, Vac. Ex.

THUNDERSHOWER, n. s. [thunder and shower.] A rain accompanied with thunder.

The conceit is long in delivering, and at last it comes like a thundershower, full of sulphur and darkness, with a terrible crack.

Stillingfleet.

In thundershowers the winds and clouds are oftentimes contrary to one another, especially if hail falls, the sultry weather below directing the wind one way, and the cold above the clouds another.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

THUNDERSTONE, n. s. [thunder and stone.]

A stone fabulously supposed to be emitted by thunder; thunderbolt.

Fear no more the lightning flash,
Nor th' all-dreaded thunderstone.

Shaksp. Cymb.

To THUNDERSTRIKE, v. a. [thunder and strike.]

1. To blast or hurt with lightning.

I remained as a man thunderstricken, not daring, nay not able, to behold that power.

Sidney.

The overthrown he rais'd, and as a herd
Of goats, or timorous flock, together throng'd,
Drove them before him thunderstruck.

Milton, P. L.

With the voice divine
Nigh thunderstruck, the exalted man, to whom
Such high attest was given, a while survey'd

Milton, P. R.

'Tis said that thunderstruck Enceladus
Lies stretch'd supine.

Addison.

2. To astonish with any thing terrible.

Fear from our hearts took
The very life; to be so thunderstrook

Chayman.

With such a voice,
Nigh thunderstruck, the exalted man, to whom
Such high attest was given, a while survey'd

Milton, P. R.

'Tis said that thunderstruck Enceladus
Lies stretch'd supine.

Addison.

2. To astonish with any thing terrible.

Fear from our hearts took
The very life; to be so thunderstrook

Chayman.

THURIBLE,  n. s.* [turribulum, low Lat.]
A censer; a pan to burn incense in.

Cowel.

THURIFEROUS, adj. [thurifer, Lat.]

Bearing frankincense.

THURIFICATION, † n. s. [thuris and facio, Latin.] The act of fuming with incense;
the act of burning incense.

The way of thurification,
To make fumigation.

Skelton, Poems, p. 290.

Some semblance of an idolatrous thurification.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 3. C. 3.

The several acts of worship which were required to be performed to images are processions, genuflections, thurifications, deosculations, and oblations.

Stillingfleet.

THURSDAY, n. s. [thorsday, Danish; from thor. Thor was the son of Odin; yet, in some of the northern parts, they worshipped the Supreme Deity under his name, attributing the power over all things, even the inferior deities, to him.

Stillingfleet.] The fifth day of the week.

THUS, adv. [ðu; Saxon.]

1. In this manner; in this wise.

It cannot be that they who speak thus, should thus judge.

Hooker.

The knight him calling, asked who he was,
Who lifting up his head, him answer'd thus.

Spenser.

I return'd with similar proof enough,
With tokens thus and thus.

Shaks. Cymbeline.

To be thus is nothing;
But to be safely thus.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I have sinned against the Lord, and thus has
I done.

Jos. vii. 23.

The Romans used a like wise endeavour, and whiles in a higher, in a wiser strain, making concord a deity; thus seeking peace, not by an oath, but by prayer.

Holyday.

That the principle that sets on work these organs, is nothing else but the modification of matter thus or thus posited, is false.

Hale.

Beware, I warn thee yet, to tell thy griefs
In terms becoming majesty to hear:

Dryden, Don Sebast.

I warn thee thus, because I know thy temper
Is insolent.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

Thus in the triumphs of soft peace I reign.

Dryden.

All were attentive to the godlike man,
When from his lofty couch he thus began.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To this degree; to this quantity.

A counsellor of state in Spain said to his master,
I will tell your majesty thus much for your comfort, your majesty hath but two enemies; whereof the one is all the world, and the other your own ministers.

Bacon.

Even thus wise, that is, thus peaceable, were very Heathens; thus peaceable among themselves, though without grace; thus peaceable by wise nature very like grace.

Holyday.

He said, thus far extend, thus far thy bounds.

Milton, P. L.

Thus much concerning the first earth, and its production and form.

Burnet, Theory.

No man reasonably pretend-† to know thus much, but he must pretend to know all things.

Tillotson.

This you must do to inherit life; and if you have come up thus far, firmly persevere in it.

Wake.

To THWACK, † v. a. [ðaccian, Saxon.

Dr. Johnson. — If it be from the Saxon word, it should seem to be ironically, for that means to touch lightly. To thack is the old English word: "This carter thakketh his horse upon the Wake.

croupe." Chaucer, Fr. Tale.] To strike with something blunt and heavy; to thresh; to bang; to belabour. A ludicrous word.

He shall not stay;
We'll thwack him hence with distaffs. Shaks.
Nick fell foul upon John Bull, to snatch the cudgel he had in his hand, that he might thwack Lewis with it. Arbuthnot.

These long fellows, as sightly as they are, should find their jackets well thwack'd. Arbuthnot.

THWACK. n. s. [from the verb.] A heavy hard blow.

But Talgol first with hardy thwack
Twice bruised his head, and twice his back.

Hudibras.
They place several pots of rice, with cudgels in the neighbourhood of each pot; the monkeys descend from the trees, take up the arms, and belabour one another with a storm of thwacks.

Addison, Freeholder.
THWAITE.* n. s. [some take it for a pasture, from the Dutch hwoit. Camden. Twaite, Norm. Fr. Kelham.] Any plain parcel of ground, from which wood has been grubbed up, enclosed and converted into tillage: a northern word.

It being a stony and mountainous country, is not every where so fit for tillage or meadow; but in several parts and parcels, as they are marked by nature, differing in form and quality of soil, or otherwise enclosed by the inhabitants from the barren waste of the fells, such parts or parcels are now and were of old called thwaits, sometimes with the addition of their quality; as Branchethwaite, of brackens or fern growing there; Stonethwaite, of rocks; and such like.

Nicolson and Burn, Hist. of Cumberland, p. 14.

THWART.† adj. [θῠῡρπ, Saxon; dwaers, Teut. obliquus; thwer, Icel. transversus, oppositus. Serenius.]

1. Transverse; cross to something else.

This else to several spheres thou must ascribe,
Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities.

Milton, P. L.
2. Perverse; inconvenient; mischievous. [thairs, Goth. iratus; θρεορ, Saxon; thwere, Icel. contrarius, rebellis. Serenius.]

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen; that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.

Shakespeare, L. Lear.
THWART.* adv. [from the adjective.] Obliquely.

Yet whether thwart or flatly it did lyte,
The templed steele did not into his braynepan byte.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. vi. 30.

TO THWART. v. a.
1. To cross; to lie or come cross any thing.

Swift as a shooting star
In autumn thwarts the night. Milton, P. L.
Yon stream of light, a thousand ways
Upward and downward thwarting and convolv'd.

Thomson.
2. To cross; to oppose; to traverse; to contravene.

Some sixteen months and longer might have staid,
If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. Shaks.
Lesser had been
The thwartings of your dispositions, if
You had not shew'd how you were dispos'd
Ere they lack power to cross you. Shaks. Coriol.
The understanding and will then never disagreed;
for the proposals of the one never thwarted the inclinations of the other. South.

The rays both good and bad, of equal pow'r,
Each thwarting other made a mingled hour.

Dryden.
In vain did I the godlike youth deplore,
The more I begg'd, they thwarted me the more.

Addison.
Neptune aton'd, his wrath should now refrain,
Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain.

Pope, Odyssey.
By thwarting passions tost, by cares oppress,
He found the tempest pictur'd in his breast.

Young.
To THWART. v. n. To be in opposition to.

It is easy to be imagined what reception any proposition shall find, that shall at all thwart with these internal oracles.

Locke.
THWA'RTING.† n. s. [from thwart.] The act of crossing; the act of opposing.

Socrates knew before he married her, that his Xantippe was a cold unsufferable; yet he wittingly did marry her, to exercise his patience, that, by the practice of enduring her shrewish heats, he might be able to brook all companies; the brawls, the scorns, the sophisms, and the petulancies of rude and unskilful men; the frettings, the thwartings, and the excruciations of life.

Feltham, Res. ii. 57.
THWA'RTINGLY. adv. [from thwarting.] Oppositely; with opposition.

THWA'RTNESS.* n. s. [from thwart.] Untowardness; perverseness.

Can any man be so unreasonable as to defend it lawful, upon some unkind usages or thwartness of disposition, for a parent to abandon and forsake his child, or the son to cast off his parent? much less therefore may it be thus betwixt an husband and wife: "They two are one flesh."

Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. D. 4. C. 2.
TO THWITE.* v. a. [θῠῡtan, Saxon.] To cut, chip, or hack with a knife: used in the north, and is in the old dictionary of Huloet.

A bow—full even—
And it was painted well and thwitten.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 933.
THWI'TTLE.* n. s. [hwitell, Sax. whence our whittle; but thwittle is the older English word. See TO THWITE.] A kind of knife: this is also a northern word.

A Sheffield thwittle bare he in his hose.

Chaucer, Reve's Tale.
THY. pronoun. [θῠin, Sax.] Of thee; belonging to thee; relating to thee: the possessive of thou. See THOU.

Whatever God did say,
Is all thy clear and smooth uninterrupted way.

Cowley.
Th' example of the heavenly lark,
Thy fellow-poet, Cowley, mark.

Cowley.
These are thy works, Parent of good!

Milton, P. L.
THYSELF. pronoun reciprocal. [thy and self.]

1. It is commonly used in the oblique cases, or following the verb.

Come high or low,
Thyself and office deify show. Shaks. Macbeth.

It must and shall be so; content thyself. Shaks.
2. In poetical or solemn language it is sometimes used in the nominative.

These goods thyself can on thyself bestow. Dryd.

THYNE wood. n. s. A precious wood.

The merchandize of gold and all thyne wood are departed from thee. Rev. xviii. 12.

THYME. n. s. [thym, Fr. thymus, Lat.]

A plant.
The thyme hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper-lip

is erect, and generally split in two, and the under-lip is divided into three parts; out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, accompanied by four embryos, which afterward become so many seeds, inclosed in a husk, which before was the flower-cup; to these marks must be added hard ligneous stalks, and the flowers gathered into heads. Miller.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'r'y thyme. Dryd.
THYMY.* adj. [from thyme.] Abounding with thyme.

Guide my way
Through fair Lyceum's walk, the green retreats
Of Academus, and the thymy vale,
Where oft enchanted with Socratic sounds
Ilissus pure devolv'd his tuneful stream
In gentler murmurs. Alexander, Pl. of Imag. B. 1.

The scudding hare
Draws to her dew-sprent seat, o'er thymy heaths,
A path as gently waving. Mason, Eng. Gard. B. 2.

TIAR.† } n. s. [tiare, Fr. tiara, Lat. Dr. TIARA.] Johnson.—The Saxons had tȳp in a similar sense; and tiar is much older than the time of Milton, Dr. Johnson's earliest authority. A dress for the head; a diadem.

His [the pope's] triple tiara and crowne evince the same.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616,) p. 165.
His back was turn'd, but not his brightness hid;
Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar.

Milton, P. L.
This royal robe and this tiara wore
Old Priam, and this golden sceptre bore

In full assemblies. Dryden, Æn.
A tiar wreath'd her head with many a fold,
Her waist was circled with a zone of gold. Pope.

Fairer she seem'd distinguish'd from the rest,
And better mien disclos'd, as better dress:
A bright tiara round her forehead ty'd,
To juster bounds confin'd its rising pride. Prior.

TO TICE.† v. a. [from entice. Dr. Johnson.—This is an old English verb, and is also used in Scotland. Mr. Chalmers observes, that Dr. Johnson gives no derivation of entice, to which he refers tice; and that the roots of both are probably tȳcan, Sax. suadere, solicitare. Dr. Jamieson notices this Saxon etymon, as also Fr. attiser, Ital. tizzare, accendere, together with the Arm. tis, a train, and Su. Goth. tussa, to incite. But it is, no doubt, merely an abbreviation of the old French enticer, which is the origin, as I have shewn, of our entice.] To draw; to allure.

These two have tice'd me hither to this place. Titus Andronicus.

What is in your lip
To tice the enamour'd soul to dwell with more Ambition, than the yet unwild'r'd blush
That speaks the innocence of mine? Beaumont and Fl. Coronation.

Lovely enchanting language, sugar-cane,
Honey of roses, whether wilt thou fly?
Hath some fond lover tice'd thee to thy bane?
And wilt thou leave the church, and love a sty? Herbert.

TYCEMENT.* n. s. [enticement, old Fr.] Allurement. Obsolete. Huloet.

TICK.† n. s. [This word seems contracted from ticket, a tally on which debts are scored. Dr. Johnson.—It is certainly a contraction of ticket, the ancient word for trust or score; which

Mr. Malone considers to have been the token given by the creditor to the debtor, to ascertain the debt. "You may swim in twentie of their boates over the water upon ticket." Dekker, Gull's Hornebooke, 1609. "Taking up arms and ammunition from the States United, with whom they went on ticket, and long days of payment, for want of ready money for their satisfaction." Heylin, Hist. of the Presbyterians, (1670,) p. 437.]

1. Score; trust.

If thou hast the heart to try't,
I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,
And once more for that carcase vile Fight upon tick. Hudibros.

When the money is got into hands that have bought all that they have need of, whoever needs any thing else must go on tick, or barter for it. Locke.

You would see him in the kitchen weighing the beef and butter, paying ready money, that the maids might not run a tick at the market. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

2. [Tique, Fr. teke, Dutch.] The louse of dogs or sheep.

Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

3. The case which holds the feathers of a bed.

To TICK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run on score.

2. To trust; to score.

The money went to the lawyers; council won't tick. Arbuthnot.

To TICK.* v. a. [tikken, Dutch.] To note by regular vibration, as a watch or clock.

I do not suppose that the ancient clocks ticked or noticed the seconds. Tollet, Note on Shakspeare. Wint. Tale.

TICK.* n. s. [from the verb.] The sound made in ticking.

Its noise is more agreeable to the leisurely and constant tick of the death-watch. Ray, Rem. p. 324.

TRICKEN.† } n. s. The same with tick. A TRICKING. } sort of strong linen for bedding. Bailey.

Striped linen, or tickings, or dyed linen.

Dimities, tickens, checks, and the like stuffs. Bp. Berkeley, Querist, § 522.

TICKET. n. s. [etiquet, Fr.] A token of any right or debt, upon the delivery of which admission is granted, or a claim acknowledged. Guthrie, England.

There should be a paymaster appointed, of special trust, which should pay every man according to his captain's ticket, and the account of the clerk of his band. Spenser.

In a lottery with one prize, a single ticket is only enriched, and the rest are all blanks. Collier on Envy.

Let fops or fortune fly which way they will,
Disdains all note of tickets or codille. Pope.

To TICKET.* v. a. [from the noun; tiquet, Fr. ticketed. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.] To distinguish by a ticket.

In that lottery a few glittering prizes, 1000, 5000, 10,000 pounds among an infinity of blanks, drew troops of adventurers; who, if the whole fund had been equally ticketed, would never have come in. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 40.

To TYCKLE. v. a. [titillo, Lat.]

1. To affect with a prurient sensation by slight touches.

Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds! Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
The mind is moved in great vehemency only by tickling some parts of the body. Bacon.

There is a sweetness in good verse, which tickles even while it hurts; and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him against his will. Dryden.

It is a good thing to laugh at any rate; and if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness. Dryden.

2. To please by slight gratifications.

Dametas, that of all manners of stile could best conceive of golden eloquence, being withal ticked by Musidorus's praises, had his brain so turned, that he became slave to that which he that sued to be his servant offered to give him. Sidney.

Expectation tickling skittish spirits,
Sets all on hazard. Shakspeare.

Such a nature
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which it treads on at noon. Shakspeare, Coriol.

I cannot rule my spleen;
My scorn rebels, and tickles me within. Dryden.
Dunce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd
To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryden.

A drunkard, the habitual thirst after his cups drives to the tavern though he has in his view the loss of health, and perhaps of the joys of another life, the least of which is such a good as he confuses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine. Locke.

To TYCKLE. v. n. To feel-titillation.

He with secret joy therefore
Did tickle inwardly in every vein,
And his false heart, fraught with all treason's store,
Was fill'd with hope, his purpose to obtain. Spenser.

TYCKLE.† adj. [I know not whence to deduce the sense of this old word.] Tottering; unfixed; unstable; uncertain; easily overthrown.

The world is now ful tikel sickerly. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

When the last O'Neal began to stand upon some tickle terms, this fellow, called baron of Dunganon, was set up to beard him. Spenser on Ireland.

Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milk-maid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Shakspeare.

The state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone. Shakspeare.
Courtiers are but tickle things to deal withal. Beaumont and Fl. Rule a Wife.

TYCKLENESS.* n. s. [from tickle.] Unsteadiness; uncertainty.

Hoard hath hate; and climbing tickleness. Chaucer, Balade of Gode Counsaile.
Fortune false—none feed
To stand with stay, and forswear tickleness. Mir. for Mag. p. 429.

TYCKLER.* n. s. [from tickle.] One that tickles. Scott.

TYCKLING.* n. s. [from tickle.] The act of affecting by slight touches; the act of pleasing by slight gratifications.

Aspiring sons,
Who with these hourly ticklings grow so pleas'd,
And wantonly conceited of themselves. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

TYCKLISH. adj. [from tickle.]

1. Sensible to titillation; easily tickled.

The palm of the hand, though it hath as thin a skin as the other parts, yet is not ticklish, because it is accustomed to be touched. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Tottering; uncertain; unfixed.

Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state, more easy to receive distempers and mutations than England was. Bacon.

Did it stand upon so ticklish and tottering a foundation as some men's fancy hath plac'd it, it would be no wonder should it frequently vary. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Difficult; nice.

How shall our author hope a gentle fate,
Who dares most impudently not translate?
It had been civil, in these ticklish times,
To fetch his fools and knaves from foreign clime. Swift.

TYCKLISHNESS.† n. s. [from ticklish.] The state of being ticklish.

You know the ticklishness of London pulpits, and how ill it would become me to place a man in a London church, that were not both a strong and a sound man. Donne, in Sir T. Matthews's Lett. (1660,) p. 355.

The difficulty and ticklishness of the times. Paley, Horae Paul. p. 226.

TRICKTACK.† n. s. [trictac, Fr.] A game at tables. See also TRICKTRACK.

Tick-tack sets a man's intentions on their guard. Errors in this and war can be but once amended. Hall, Horae Viciosa, (1646,) p. 149.

And that those pretended tumults were chastised by their own army for new tumults, is not proved by a game at ticktack with words; Tumults and Armies, Armies and Tumults; but seems more like the method of a justice irrational than divine. Milton, Eiconocl. § 26.

TID. adj. [tyðbeep, Sax.] Tender; soft; nice.

TYDBIT. n. s. [tid and bū.] A dainty.

To TYDDER. } v. a. [from tid.] To use
To TYDDLE. } tenderly; to fondle.

TIDE. n. s. [tyð, tyb, Saxon; tijd, Dutch and Icelandick.]

1. Time; season; while.

There they alight in hope themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide. Spenser.

They two forth passing,
Receiv'd those two fair brides, their love's delight,
Which, at the appointed tide,
Each one did make his bride. Spenser.

What hath this day deserv'd,
That it in golden letter should be set
Among the high tides in the kalender? Shakspeare, K. John.

At New-year's tide following the king chose his master of the horse. Wotton.

2. Alternate ebb and flow of the sea.

That motion of the water called tides is a rising and falling of the sea: the cause of this is the attraction of the moon, whereby the part of the water in the great ocean which is nearest the moon, being most strongly attracted, is raised higher than the rest; and the part opposite to it being least attracted, is also higher than the rest; and these two opposite rises of the surface of the water in the great ocean following the motion of the moon from east to west, and striking against the large coasts of the continents, from thence rebound back again, and so make floods and ebbs in narrow seas and rivers. Locke.

3. Commotion; violent confluence.

As in the tides of people once up there want not stirring winds to make them more rough, so this people did light upon two ringleaders. Bacon, Hen. VII.

4. Stream; course.

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times. Shakspeare.

The rapid currents drive
Towards the retreating sea their furious tide. Milton.

But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the sea in tributary tides,

Be bribe sufficient to corrupt thy breast,
Or violate with dreams thy peaceful rest. Dryden.

Continual tide

Flows from th' exhilarating fount. Philips.
To TIDE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To drive with the stream.

They are tided down the stream of looseness.
Feltham, Res. ii. 8.

Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the naked poop, are tided back
By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore. Dryden.

To TIDE. v. n. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the tide.

When, from his dint, the foe still backward
shrunk,

Wading within the Ouse, he dealt his blows,
And sent them, rolling, to the tiding Humber. Philips.

TIDEGATE. n. s. [tide and gate.] A gate through which the tide passes into a basin. Bailey.

TIDESMAN. n. s. [tide and man.] A tide-waiter or customhouse officer, who watches on board of merchant-ships till the duty of goods be paid and the ships unloaded. Bailey.

TIDEWAITER. n. s. [tide and wait.] An officer who watches the landing of goods at the customhouse.

Employments will be in the hands of Englishmen; nothing left for Irishmen but vicarages and tidewaiters' places. Swift.

TIDILY. adv. [from tidy.] Neatly; readily.

TIDINESS. n. s. [from tidy.] Neatness;
readiness.

TIDINGS. n. s. [tīdan, Saxon, to happen, to betide; tīdende, Icelandic.] News;
an account of something that has happened; incidents related.

When her eyes she on the dwarf had set,
And saw the signs that deadly tidings spake,
She fell to ground for sorrowful regret. Spenser.

I shall make my master glad with these tidings.
Shakespeare.

They win
Great numbers of each nation to receive,
With joy, the tidings brought from heaven. Milton, P. L.

Portius, thy looks speak somewhat of importance:

What tidings dost thou bring? methinks I see Unusual gladness sparkling in thy eyes. Addison.

The messenger of these glad tidings, by whom this covenant of mercy was proposed and ratified, was the eternal Son of his bosom. Rogers.

TIDY.† adj. [tīdī, Icelandic, frequens.

The primary sense is from the Saxon tīd, tide, season. Wicliffe uses tīdeful in this sense: "tīdeful fruit." James,
v. 7. So tydigh, Teut. tempestivus, maturus.]

1. Seasonable; timely.
If weather be faire and tīdī, thy grain
Make speedilī carriage, for feare of a raine. Tusser.

What a hap had I,
And what a tydī fortune, when my fate
Flung me upon this bear-whelp!
Bacon, and Fl. Tam. Tamed.

2. Neat; ready. [tīdīg, Su. Goth. decorus, decens.]

Whenever by yon barley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay, Past.

3. It seems to be here put by mistake or irony for untidy. Dr. Johnson.—Rather perhaps ironically for small. The word is applied to Falstaff. Tidy is used in the north, according to Grose, for small.

Thou whoreson tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting?

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

To TIE. v. a. [tīan, tīgan, Sax.]

1. To bind; to fasten with a knot.

Tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them. 1 Sam. vi. 7.

Thousands of men and women, tied together in chains, were, by the cruel Turks, enforced to run as fast as their horses. Knolles, Hist.

2. To knit; to complicate.

We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument; but the harder it is tied, we shall feel the pleasure more sensibly when we come to loose it. Burnet.

3. To hold; to fasten; to join so as not easily to be parted.

In bond of virtuous love together tied,
Together serv'd they, and together died. Fairfax.

The intermediate ideas tie the extremes so firmly together, and the probability is so clear, that assent necessarily follows it. Locke.

Certain theorems resolve propositions which depend on them, and are as firmly made out from thence, as if the mind went afresh over every link of the whole chain that ties them to first self-evident principles. Locke.

4. To hinder; to obstruct: with up, intensive.

Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak. Shakespeare.

Melantius stay,
You have my promise, and my hasty word
Restrains my tongue, but ties not up my sword. Wallar.

Honour and good nature may tie up his hands;
but as these would be very much strengthened by reason and principle, so without them they are only instincts. Addison.

5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain;
to confine.

Although they profess they agree with us touching a prescript form of prayer to be used in the church, they have declared that it shall not be prescribed as a thing whereunto they will tie their ministers. Hooker.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Cannot God make any of the appropriate acts of worship to become due only to himself? cannot he tie us to perform them to him? Stillingfleet.

They tie themselves so strictly to unity of place, that you never see in any of their plays a scene change in the middle of an act. Dryden.

Not tied to rules of policy, you find
Revenge less sweet than a forgiving mind. Dryden.

No one seems less tied up to a form of words.

The mind should, by several rules, be tied down to this, at first, uneasy task; use will give it facility. Locke.

They have no uneasy expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the present moment. Arbutnot.

A healthy man ought not to tie himself up to strict rules, nor to abstain from any sort of food in common use. Arbutnot.

6. It may be observed of tie, that it has often the particles up and down joined to it, which are, for the most part, little more than emphatical, and which, when united with this word, have at least consequentially the same meaning.

TIE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Knot; fastening. See TIE.

2. Bond; obligation.

The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the lesser tie of respect. Bacon.

No forest, cave, or savage den
Holds more pernicious beasts than men;
Vows, oaths, and contracts they devise,
And tell us they are sacred ties. Waller.

3. A knot of hair.

The well-sworn ties an equal homage claim,
And either should have its share of fame. Young.

TIER. n. s. [tiere, tiere, old Fr. tuyer,
Dutch.] A row; a rank.

Fornovius, in his choler, discharged a tier of great ordnance amongst the thickest of them. Knolles.

TIERCE. n. s. [tiers, tiercier, Fr.] A vessel holding the third part of a pipe.

Go now deny his tierce. B. Jonson.

Wit, like tierce claret, when 't begins to pall,
Neglected lies, and 's of no use at all;
But in its full perfection of decay
Turns vinegar, and comes again in play. Dorset.

TIERCET. n. s. [from tiers, Fr.] A triplet; three lines.

TIFF. n. s. [A low word, I suppose without etymology.]

1. Liquor; drink.

I, whom griping penury surrounds,
And hunger, sure attendant upon want,
With scanty offals, and small acid toff,
Wretched repast! my meagre corps sustain. Philips.

2. A fit of peevishness or sullenness; a pet.

To TIFF. v. n. To be in a pet; to quarrel. A low word.

To TIFF.* v. a. [tiffer, old French.] To dress; to deck.

Is the Miss under a force when she culls among her trinkets with curious toil to tiff herself out in the most engaging manner?

Search, Free Will, &c. (1763), p. 98.

TIFFANY. n. s. [tiffer, to dress up, old
Fr. Skinner.] Very thin silk.

The smock of sulphur will not black a paper,
and is commonly used by women to whiten tiff- janies. Brown.

TIG.* n. s. [from tekan, Goth. to touch.]
A play in which children try to touch each other last.

TIGE. n. s. [in architecture.] The shaft of a column from the astragal to the capital. Bailey.

TIGER. n. s. [tigre, Fr. tigris, Lat.] A fierce beast of the leonine kind.

When the blast of war blows in your ear,
Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Has the steer
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him? Thomson, Spring.

TIGHT.† adj. [dicht, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—From the Sax. tīan, to tie. Mr.
H. Tooke.—In the Sax. tīgan, to bind, perhaps we see the true origin of the English tight, as signifying neat, generally traced to Teut. dicht, solidus. It seems merely q. d. tied close, well knit.
Dr. Jamieson.]

1. Tense; close; not loose.

If the centre holes be not very deep, and the pikes fill them not very tight, the strength of the string will alter the centre holes.

Moxon, Mech. Ez.

I do not like this running knot, it holds too tight; I may be stifled all of a sudden.

Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Every joint was well grooved; and the door did not move on hinges, but up and down like a sash, which kept my closet so tight that very little water came in.

Swift.

2. Free from fluttering rags; less than neat.

O Thomas, I'll make a loving wife;
I'll spin and card, and keep our children tight.

Gay.

Drest her again genteel and neat,
And rather tight than great.

Swift.

3. Handy; adroit.
My queen's a squire
More tight at this than thou.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

A tight maid, ere he for wine can ask,
Guesses his meaning, and unloils the flask.

Dryden, Juv.

The girl was a tight clever wench as any.

Arbuthnot.

TIGHT.* pret. Of to tie. Obsolete.
And therewith a great long chaine he tight
With which he drew him forth even in his own despight.

Spenser, F. Q.

TO TIGHTEN. v. a. [from tight.] To straiten; to make close.

TIGHTER. n. s. [from tighten.] A riband or string by which women straiten their clothes.

TIGHTLY.* adv. [from tight.]

1. Closely; not loosely.
2. Neatly; not idly; briskly; cleverly;
adroitly.

Hold, sirrah, bear you these letters tightly;
Sail, like my pinnace, to these golden shores.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Handle your pruning-knife with dexterity:
tightly, I say, go tightly to your business; you have cost me much.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

TIGHTNESS. n. s. [from tight.]

1. Closeness; not looseness.

The bones are inflexible, which arises from the greatness of the number of corpuscles that compose them, and the firmness and tightness of their union.

Woodward on Fossils.

2. Neatness.
TIGRESS. n. s. [from tiger.] The female
of the tiger.

It is reported of the tigress, that several spots rise in her skin when she is angry.

Wou'd tile, an epigram wou'd thatch.

Swift, Miscell.

2. To cover as tiles.

The rafters of my body, bone,
Being still with you, the muscle, sinew and vein,
Which tile this house, will come again.

Donne.

TILER. n. s. [tuilier, Fr. from tile.] One whose trade is to cover houses with tiles.

A Flemish tiler, falling from the top of a house upon a Spaniard, killed him; the next of the blood prosecuted his death; and when he was offered pecuniary recompence, nothing would serve him but lex talionis: whereupon the judge said to him, he should go up to the top of the house, and then fall down upon the tiler.

Bacon, Apophth.

TILING. n. s. [from tile.] The roof covered with tiles.

They went upon the house-top, and let him down through the tiling with his couch before Jesus.

St. Luke, v. 19.

pera, in qua digitalia, acum, fila, conduct. Lye.] A money-box in a shop; a tiller.

They break up counters, doors and tills,
And leave the empty chests in view.

Swift.

TILL.* prep. [til, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Horne Tooke has said, that we always use from (and from only) for the beginning either of time or motion; but for the termination we apply sometimes to, and sometimes till: to, indifferently either to place or time; but till to time only, and never to place. Thus we may say, from morn to night, or from morn till night: but we cannot say, from Turkey till England. Div. of Purley, i.
348. — Mr. Tooke had forgotten our old language, and knew not that till is commonly used in the sense of to, in the north of England. "They all gon home til Athens." Chaucer, Kn. Tale. Dr.
Johnson was also a stranger to this employment of the word.]

1. To the time of.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.

Cowley.

2. To. North.

TILL conjunction.

1. To the time when.

Woods and rocks had ears

To rapture, till the savage clamour drown'd

Both harp and voice.

Milton, P. L.

The unity of place we neither find in Aristotle, Horace, or any who have written of it, till in our age the French poets first made it a precept of the stage.

Dryden.

2. To the degree that.

Meditate so long till you make some act of prayer to God, or glorification of him.

By. Taylor.

To this strange pitch their high assertions flew,
Till Nature's self scarce look'd on them as two.

Cowley.

Goddess, spread thy reign till Isis' elders reel.

Pope.

TO TILL.* v. a. [tilan, Saxon; teelen,
Dutch.]

1. To cultivate; to husband: commonly used of the husbandry of the plow.

This paradise I give thee, count it thine,

To til, and keep, and of the fruit to eat.

Milton, P. L.

Send him from the garden forth, to til

The ground whence he was taken.

Milton, P. L.

The husbandman tilleth the ground, is employed in an honest business that is necessary in life, and very capable of being made an acceptable service unto God.

Low.

2. To procure; to prepare. [This is the primary meaning of the Sax. verb tilan.]

Nor knows he how to digge a well,

Nor neatly dresse a spring:

Nor knows a trap or snare to til.

W. Browne, Shop. Pipes.

TILLABLE. adj. [from til.] Arable; fit for the plow.

The tillable fields are so hilly, that the oxen can hardly take sure footing.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf.

Milton, P. L.

Incite them to improve the tillage of their country, to recover the bad soil, and to remedy the waste.

Milton on Education.

Bid the laborious hind,
Whose harden'd hands did long in tillage toil,

Neglect the promis'd harvest of the soil.

Dryden.

That there was tillage Moses intimates; but whether bestowed on all, or only upon some parts of that earth, as also what sort of tillage that was,
is not expressed.

Woodward

TILLER.* n. s. [from till.]

1. Husbandman; ploughman.

They bring in sea-sand partly after their nearness to the places, and partly by the good husbandry of the tiller.

Carew.

Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground.

Gen. iv. 2.

The worm that gnaws the ripening fruit, sa-gues!

Canker or locust hurtful to infest

The blade; while husks elude the tiller's care,

And eminence of want distinguishes the year.

Prior.

2. The rudder of a boat.

3. The horse that goes in the thill. Properly thiller.

4. A till; & a small drawer.

Search her cabinet, and thou shalt find
Each tiller there with love-epistles lin'd.

Dryden, Juv.

5. A young timber-tree in a growing state: a technical word with woodmen.

Mason.

This they usually make of a curved tiller.

Evelyn, B. iii. ch. 4. § 29.

TILLYFALLY.† adv. [a hunting phrase
TILLYVALLEY.† borrowed from the French, ty a hillaut et valley, Venerie de Jacques Fouilloux, 1585, fol. 12.
Douce.] A word used formerly when any thing said was rejected as trifling or impertinent.

Am not I consanguineous? am not I of her blood? tillyvalley, lady! Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
Tillyfally, Sir John, never tell me; your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves

Are brazen images of canonized saints.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him; and he never saw him but once in the tilt-yard, and then he broke his head.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Images, representing the forms of Hercules,
Apollo, and Diana, he placed in the tilt-yard at Constantinople.

Knolles.

The spouses of Hippolyte the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen.

Dryden.

In tilts and tournaments the valiant strove
By glorious deeds to purchase Emma's love.

Prior.

4. A thrust.

His majesty seldom dismissed the foreigner, till he had entertained him with the slaughter of two or three of his liege subjects, whom he very extemporally put to death with the tilt of his lance.

Addison, Freeholder.

5. Inclination forward: as, the vessel is a tilt, when it is inclined that the liquor may run out. [from tillen, Dutch. See the verb.]

TO TILT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover like a tilt of a boat.

2. To point as in tilts.

Ajax interpos'd

His seven-fold shield, and screen'd Laertes' son,

When the insulting Trojans urg'd him sore
With tilted spears.

Philips.

Now horrid slaughter reigns:

Sons against fathers tilt the fatal lance,

Careless of duty, and their native grounds

Distain with kindred blood.

Philips.

3. [Tillen, Dutch.] To turn up so as to run out: as, the barrel is tilted; that is, leaned forward.

TO TILT.† v. n.

1. To run in tilts or tournaments.

To describe races and games,

Or tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields.

Milton, P. L.

2. To fight with rapiers.

Friends all but even now; and then, but now —

Swords out and tilting one at other's breasts,

In opposition bloody.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Scow'ring the watch grows out of fashion wit:

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,

Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chicken-hearted,

To fright the ladies first, and then be parted.

Dryden.

It is not yet the fashion for women of quality to tilt.

Collier.

Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet

To run a-muck, and tilt at all I meet.

Pope.

Uplifted; and secure with beaked prow

Rode tilting o'er the waves.

Milton, P. L.

The fleet swift tilting o'er the surges flew,

Till Grecian cliffs appear'd.

Pope, Odys.

5. To fall on one side.

As the trunk of the body is kept from tilting forward by the muscles of the back, so from falling backward by those of the belly.

Grew, Cosmol.

TILT.† n. s. [from tilt.] One who tilts;
one who fights.

A pious tilt, that spurs his horse on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

He us'd the only antique philtres,

Deriv'd from old heroic tilts.

Hudibras.

If war you chuse, and blood must needs be spilt

here,

Let me alone to match your tilt.

Granville.

TILTH.† n. s. [from till; & Saxon, tilð.]
Husbandry; culture; tillage; tilled ground; cultivated land. Dr. Johnson has mistakenly considered the word in Milton as an adjective; which Mr.

Mason also has remarked.

Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none;

No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

Her plenteous womb

Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry.

Shaks.

Give the fallow lands their seasons and their tilth.

Drayton.

He beheld a field,

Part arable and tilth; whereon were sheaves

New reap'd.

Milton, P. L.

TIMBER.† n. s. [timber, Saxon; from timbran, to build; timbrían, Goth. the same; timmer, Su. Goth. and timmer is our northern pronunciation of timber.]

1. Wood fit for building.

I learn'd of lighter timber cotes to frame,

Such as might save my sheep and me from shame.

Spenser.

For the body of the ships no nation doth equal England for the oaken timber wherewith to build them; but there must be a great providence used, that our ship-timber be not unnecessarily wasted.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

The straw was laid below,
Of chips and serewood was the second row;
The third of greens, and timber newly fell'd.

Dryden.

There are hardly any countries that are destitute of timber of their own growth.

Woodward.

Upon these walls they plant quick and timber trees, which thrive exceedingly.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

Who set the twigs, shall he remember,

That is in haste to sell the timber?

And what shall of thy woods remain?

Except the box that threw the main?

Prior.

2. The main trunk of a tree.

We take

From every tree, loap, bark, and part o' the timber,

And though we leave it with a root thus hackt,

The air will drink the sap.

Shakespeare.

3. The main beams of a fabrick.

4. Materials, ironically.

Such dispositions are the very errors of human nature, and yet they are the fittest timber to make politics of, like to knee timber, that is good for ships to be tossed, but not for houses that shall stand firm.

Bacon.

TO TIMBER.† v. n. [from the noun.] To light on a tree. A cant word.

The one took up in a thicket of brush-wood,

and the other timbered upon a tree hard by.

L'Estrange.

TO TIMBER.† v. a. To furnish with beams or timber; to form; to support.

Lo, the cock;

A purple plume timbers his stately crest;

On his high gorget and broad hairy breast

A rich coat-armour shines.

Sylvester, Du Bart. (1621.) p. 462.

TIMBERED.† adj. [from timber; timbré, Fr.] Built; formed; contrived.

squared nor timbered for it.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

TIMBERSOW. n. s. A worm in wood;
perhaps the wood-louse.

Divers creatures, though they be loathsome to take, are of this kind; as earth-worms, timbersows, snails.

Bacon.

TIMBREL.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson gives the French timbre, as the derivation.

But timbre means the bell of a clock, or a hall-bell. Timbrel is perhaps a corruption of tambour, or tambourine, written also timburine.] A kind of musical instrument played by pulsation.

The damsels they delight,

When they their timbrels suite,

And thereunto dance and carol sweet.

Spenser, Epithal.

In their hands sweet timbrels all upheld on high.

Spenser.

Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;

Praise with violins and lutes.

Sandys, Paraph.

For her, through Egypt's fruitful clime re-nown'd,

Let weeping Nilus hear the timbrel sound.

Pope, Statius.

The sable-stoled sorcerers bear his worship ark.
Milton, Ode Nativ.

TIMBURINE.* n. s. See TAMBOURINE.

TIME.† n. s. [tim, tīma, Sax. tīma, Icel. tīm, Erse; timme, Swedish.]

1. The measure of duration.

This consideration of duration, as set out by certain periods, and marked by certain measures or epochas, is that which most properly we call time. Locke.

Time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand,
But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps the incomer. Shaksp. Troil. and Cress.

Come what come may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day. Shakspere.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross exhalation, he found a long time defective upon the exactest scale. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Time, which consisteth of parts, can be no part of infinite duration, or of eternity; for then there would be infinite time past to-day, which to-morrow will be more than infinite. Time is one thing, and infinite duration is another. Grew.

2. Space of time.

Daniel desired that he would give him time, and that he would shew him the interpretation. Dan. ii. 16.

If a law be enacted to continue for a certain time, when that time is elapsed, the law ceaseth without any further abrogation. White.

He for the time remain'd stupidly good. Milton.
No time is allowed for digressions. Swift.

3. Interval.

Pomanders, and knots of powders, you may have continually in your hand; whereas perfumes you can take but at times. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Life considered as employed, or destined to employment.

A great devourer of his time, was his agency for men of quality. Tell, Life of Hammond.

All ways of holy living, all instances, and all kinds of virtue, lie open to those who are masters of themselves, their time, and their fortune. Lavo.

5. Season; proper time.

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose. Ecclesi. iii. 1.

They were cut down out of time, whose foundation was overflown with a flood. Job, xxii. 16.

He found nothing but leaves on it; for the time of figs was not yet. St. Mar. xi. 18.

Knowing the time, that it is high time to awake out of sleep. Rom. xiii. 11.

Short were her marriage joys; for in the prime
Of youth her lord expir'd before his time. Dryden.

I hope I come in time, if not to make,
At least, to save your fortune and your honour. Dryden.

The time will come when we shall be forced to bring our evil ways to remembrance, and then consideration will do us little good. Calamy, Serm.

6. A considerable space of duration; continuance; process of time.

Fight under him, there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade:
And when in service your best days are spent,
In time you may command a regiment. Dryden, Juv.

In time the mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, ideas of reflection. Locke.

One imagines, that the terrestrial matter which is showered down along with rain enlarges the bulk of the earth, and that it will in time bury all things under ground. Woodward.

I have resolved to take time, and, in spite of all misfortunes, to write you, at intervals, a long letter. Swift.

7. Age; part of duration distinct from other parts.

They shall be given into his hand until a time and times. Dan. vii. 25.

If we should impute the heat of the season unto the co-operation of any stars with the sun, it seems more favourable for our times to ascribe the same unto the constellation of Leo. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The way to please being to imitate nature, the poets and the painters, in ancient times, and in the best ages, have studied her. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

8. Past time.

I was the man in th' moon when time was. Shakspere.

9. Early time. In this sense time seems, as Mr. Bagshaw also has observed, barbarously employed like plenty for plentiful. Ray writes timely enough: "Many words, had they come timely enough, might have been useful to me." Pref. to his Collect. of Engl. Words.

Stanley at Bosworth field, though he came time enough to save his life, yet he staid long enough to endanger it. Bacon.

If they acknowledge repentance and a more strict obedience to be one time or other necessary, they imagine it is time enough yet to set about these duties. Rogers.

10. Time considered as affording opportunity.

The earl lost no time, but marched day and night. Clarendon.

He continued his delights till all the enemies' horse were passed through his quarters; nor did then pursue them in any time. Clarendon.

I would ask any man that means to repent at his death, how he knows he shall have an hour's time for it? Wh. Duty of Man.

Time is lost, which never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature. Dryden, Virg.

11. Particular quality of some part of duration.

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky. Shaks.

All the prophets in their age, the times
Of great Messiah sing. Milton, P. L.

If any reply, that the times and manners of men will not bear such a practice, that is an answer from the mouth of a professed time-server. South.

12. Particular time.

Give order, that no sort of person
Have, any time, recourse unto the princes. Shaks.

When that company died, what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men. Numb. xxvi. 10.

The worst on me must light, when time shall be.
Milton, P. L.

A time will come when my maturer muse
In Cesar's wars a nobler theme shall chuse. Dryden.

These reservoirs of snow they cut, distributing them to several shops, that from time to time supply Naples. Addison.

13. Hour of childbirth.

She intended to stay till delivered; for she was within one month of her time. Clarendon.

The first time I saw a lady dressed in one of these petticoats, I blamed her for walking abroad when she was so near her time; but soon I found all the modish part of the sex as far gone as herself. Addison, Spect.

14. Repetition of any thing, or mention with reference to repetition.

Four times he cross'd the car of night.
Milton, P. L.

Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finished. Heylin.

Every single particle would have a sphere of void space around it many hundred thousand million million times bigger than the dimensions of that particle. Bentley.

Lord Oxford, I have now the third time mentioned in this letter, expects you. Swift.

15. Musical measure.

Musick do I hear!
How sour sweet musick is
When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
Shakspere.

You by the help of tune and time
Can make that song which was but rhyme. Waller.
On their exalted wings
To the celestial spheres they climb,
And with the harmonious spheres keep time. Denham.

Heroes who o'ercome, or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which in battle's heat
Against their very corsets beat;
Keep time with their own trumpet's measure,
And yield them most excessive pleasure. Prior.
To Time, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adapt to the time; to bring or do at a proper time.

There is no greater wisdom than well to time
the beginnings and onsets of things. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It is hard to believe that where his most numerous miracles were afforded, they should all want the advantage of the congruous timings to give them their due weight and efficacy. Hammond.
The timing of things is a main point in the dispatch of all affairs. L'Estrange.

This 'tis to have a virtue out of season.
Mercy is good, but kings mistake its timing. Dryden.

A man's conviction should be strong, and so well timed, that worldly advantages may seem to have no share in it. Addison.

2. To regulate as to time.

To the same purpose old Epopeus spoke,
Who overlook'd the oars, and tim'd the stroke. Addison.

3. To measure harmonically.

He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tim'd with dying cries. Shakspere, Coriol.

TIMELY. adj. [time and full.] Seasonable; timely; early.

If this arch politician find in his pupils any remorse, any feeling of God's future judgements, he persuades them that God hath so great need of men's souls, that he will accept them at any time and upon any condition; interrupting, by his vigilant endeavours, all offer of timeful return toward God. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

TIMEKEEPER.*

n. s. A watch or clock.

TIMEPIECE. } that keeps good time. Ash.

This rate will now be used for finding the longitude by the time-keeper. Cook and King's Voyage.
Messieurs Wales and Bailey made observation on Drake's Island to ascertain the latitude, longitude, and for putting the time-pieces or watches in motion. Cook's Voyage.

TIMELESS.† adj. [from time.]

1. Unseasonable; done at an improper time.

Nor fits it to prolong the heavenly feast Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest. Pope, Odys.

2. Untimely; immature; done before the proper time.

A pack of sorrows, which would press you down, Shakspeare, Rich. II.

If unprevented, to your timeless grave. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Noble Gloucester's death,
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his timeless end. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

O wother'd, timeless youth; are all thy promises
Thy goodly growth of honours, come to this? Beaumont and Fl. Doubt. Mar.

state or circumstance of being timely.

Scott.
TÍMELY.† adj. [from time; Su. Goth.
timelig.]

1. Seasonable; sufficiently early.
The west glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Happy were I in my timely death,
Could all my travels warrant me they live. Shaks.
Lest heat should hinder us, his timely care
Hath unbesought provided. Milton, P. L.

I 'll to my charge,
And show my duty by my timely care. Dryden.
2. Keeping measure, time, or tune. Not in use.

And many bards, that to the trembling chord
Can tune their timely voices cunningly.

Spenser, F. Q.
TÍMELY. adv. [from time.] Early; soon.
The beds i' th' east are soft, and thanks to you,
That call'd me timelier than my purpose bither.

Shakespeare.
Sent to forewarn
Us timely of what else might be our loss.

Milton, P. L.
Timely advis'd, the coming evil shun;
Better not do the deed, than weep it done. Prior.

ence a courtier's servant's servant.

Overbury, Charact. sign. E. 7. b.

TÍMOROUS. adj. [timor, Lat.] Fearful; full of fear and scruple.

Preposessed heads will ever doubt it, and timorous beliefs will never dare to try it.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
The infant flames, whilst yet they were conceal'd
In tim'rous doubts, with pity I beheld;
With easy smiles dispell'd the silent fear,
That durst not tell me what I died to hear. Prior.

TÍMOROUSLY. adv. [from timorous.] Fearfully; with much fear.

We would have had you heard
The traitor speak, and timorously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treasons.

Shakespeare.
Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, and metal from wood, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms which should pretend to signify their real essences. Locke.

Let dastard souls be timorously wise:
But tell them, Pyrrhus knows not how to form
Far-fancy'd ills, and dangers out of sight.

A. Philips.
TÍMOROUSNESS.† n. s. [from timorous.]

Scorns all her tinsoil'd metaphors of pelf,
Illustrated by nothing but herself. Cleveland.

She, thinsel'd o'er in robes of varying hues,
With self-applause her wild creation views,
Sees momentary monsters rise and fall,
And with her own fool's colours gilds them all. Pope.

TINT. n. s. [teinte, Fr. tinta, Ital.] A dye; a colour.

Whether thy hand strike out some free design,
Where life awakes, and dawns at ev'ry line;
Or blend in beauteous tint the colour'd mass,
And from the canvas call the mimic face. Pope.

The virtues of most men will only blow,
Like coy auriculas, in Alpine snow;
Transplant them to the equinoctial line,
Their vigour sickens, and their tints decline. Harte.

Though it be allowed that elaborate harmony of colouring, a brilliancy of tints, a soft and gradual transition from one to another, present to the eye what an harmonious concert of music does to the ear, it must be remembered, that painting is not merely a gratification of sight. Reynolds.

To TINT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To tinge; to colour. Modern.

No more young hope tints with her light and bloom

The darkening scene. Seward, Sonn. p. 3.

TINTAMAR.* n. s. [tintamarre, old French;
from marre, a mattock; "pour houer la vigne, Greek μαρρὸν: c'est de là qu'on fait venir tintamarre, à cause du bruit que font quelquefois les vigneronns en tintant sur leur marre." Menage, and Morin. Cotgrave calls it "a clashing or crashing, a rustling or jingling noise made in the fall of wooden stuff, or vessels of metal; also, a black sants, the loud wrangling, or jangling outcries of solds or scolding fellows; any extreme or horrible din."] A confused noise; a hideous outcry. The word is noticed by Coles in his Dict. 1685.

The crowd, noise, and tintamar of the great world. Bp. Gauden's Life of Hooker, (1661,) p. 13.
Squalling hautboys, false-stopped violoncellos, buzzing bassoons,—all ill-tuned. The tintamarre, which this kind of squeaking and scraping and grumbling produces, I will not pain my reader by bringing stronger to his recollection.

Mason on Church Musick, p. 218.
TINY. adj. [tint, tynd, Danish.] Little;
small; puny. A burlesque word.

Any pretty little tiny kickshaws.

When that I was a little tiny boy,
A foolish thing was but a toy. Shaks. Tw. Night.
But ah! I fear thy little fancy roves,
On little females and on little loves;
Thy pigmy children, and thy tiny spouse,
The baby playthings that adorn thy house. Swift.

TIP.† n. s. [tip, tipken, Dutch.]

1. Top; end; point; extremity.

The tip no jewel needs to wear,
The tip is jewel of the ear. Sidney.

tongue, and wet it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Where the rainbow in the horizon
Doth pitch her tips. Broune, Brit. Past. B. 1. S. 2.

Thrice upon thy finger's tip,
Thrice upon thy rubied lip. Milton, Comus.
A rich fur composed of tips of sables.

Bp. Wren, Monarchy Assert. p. 42.
All the pleasure dwells upon the tip of his tongue. South.

She has fifty private amours, which nobody yet knows any thing of but herself, and thirty clandestine marriages that have not been touched by the tip of the tongue. Addison.

I no longer look upon lord Plausible as ridiculous, for admiring a lady's fine tip of an ear and pretty elbow. Pope.

2. One part of the play at ninepins.

Down goes his belief of your homilies and articles, thirty-nine at a tip. Dryden, Duchess of York's Pap. Defended.

To TIP.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To top; to end; to cover on the end.
We 'll tip thy horns with gold. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

language only. Howell, Instr. For. Trav. p. 206.

In his hand a reed
Stood waving tippt'd with fire. Milton, P. L.

With truncheon tippt'd with iron head,
The warrior to the lists he led. Hudibras.

How would the old king smile
To see you weigh the paws, when tippt'd with gold,
And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders? Addison.

Quartos, octaves shape the lessening pyre,
And last the little Ajax tips the spire. Pope, Dunciad.

Behold the place, where if a poet
Shin'd in description, he might show it;
Tell how the moon-beam trembling falls,
And tips with silver all the walls. Pope, Horace.

Tippt with jet,
Fair ermines spotless as the snows they press, Thomson.

2. To give: this is a low cant term.

She writes love letters to the youth in grace,
Nay, tips the wink before the cuckold's face. Dryden.

The pert jackanapes tippt me the wink, and put out his tongue at his grandfather. Tatler.

3. To strike lightly; to tap.

A third rogue tips me by the elbow. Swift.

Their judgment was, upon the whole,
That lady is the dullest soul;
Then tip their forehead in a jeer,
As who should say, she wants it here. Swift.

When I saw the keeper frown,
Tippting him with half a crown,
Now, said I, we are alone,
Name your heroes one by one. Swift.

To TIP.* v. n. With off: to fall off; to die. A vulgar phrase.

TIPPET. n. s. [æppet, Saxon.] Something worn about the neck.

His turban was white, with a small red cross on the tip: he had also a tippet of fine linnen. Bacon.

To TYPPEL.† v. n. [tepel, a dug, old Teutonic.] Dr. Johnson.—Serenius considers it as a variation only of the Belg. zuipen, or suipen, to sip.] To drink luxuriously; to waste life over the cup.

Let us grant it is not amiss to sit,
And keep the turn of tippling with a slave,
To reel the streets at noon. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

To TYPPEL. v. a. To drink in luxury or excess.

While his canting drone-pipe scann'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleveland.

To a short meal he makes a tedious grace,
Before the barley-pudding comes in place;

Then bids fall on; himself for saving charges
A peel'd slic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden.

If a slumber haply does invade
My weary limbs, my fancy's still awake,
Thoughtful of drink, and eager in a dream,
Tipples imaginary pots of ale. Philips.

TIPPLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Drink;
liquor.

While the tipple was paid for, all went merrily on. L'Estrange.

TYPPEL. adj. [from tipple.] Tipsy;
drunk.

Merry, we sail from the east,
Half tippled at a rainbow feast. Dryden.

TYPPLER.† n. s. [from tipple.] A sottish drunkard; an idle drunken fellow.

Gamesters, tipplers, tavern hunters, and other such dissolute people. Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587,) p. 313.

TIPSTAFF. n. s. [tip and staff.]

1. An officer with a staff tipped with metal.

2. The staff itself so tip.

Midnight shout and revelry,
Tipsy dance and jollity. Milton, Comus.

TIPTOE. n. s. [tip and toe.] The end of the toe.

Where the fond ape himself uprearing high,
Upon his tiptoes stalketh stately by. Spenser, Hub. Tale.

He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tiptoe when this day is nam'd,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian. Shaks.

Night's candles are burnt out, and jound day
Stands tiptoe on the misty mountains' tops. Shaks.

Religion stands on tiptoe in our land,
Ready to pass to the American strand. Herbert.

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tiptoes from the ground. Dryden.

TYPPLING-HOUSE.* n. s. A house in which liquors are sold; a publick-house.

The knave her father—kept a tippling-house.
Beaumont, and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

Sitting in tippling-houses for whole nights together. Life of A. Wood, p. 43.

TΥΠΤΟΡ.* An expression, often used in common conversation, denoting the utmost degree, excellence, or perfection.

If you love operas, there will be the most splendid in Italy, four tiptop voices, a new theatre.

Gray to West, Lett. (1741.)

TIRE.† n. s. [ciep, Sax. apparatus, ordo, series.]

1. Rank; row. Sometimes written tier.

Your lowest tier of ordnance must lie four foot clear above water, when all loading is in, or else those your best pieces will be of small use at sea, in any grown weather that makes the billows to rise. Raleigh, Essays.

Stood rank'd of seraphim another row,
In posture to displode their second tire
Of thunder. Milton, P. L.

In all those wars there were few trirames, most of them being of one tire of oars of fifty banks.

Arbutnot.

2. Furniture; apparatus.

Saint George's worth
Enkindles like desire of high exploits:
Immediate sieges, and the tire of war

Rowl in thy eager mind. Philips.

When they first peep forth of the ground, they shew their whole tire of leaves, then flowers, next seeds. Woodward.

3. [Corrupted from tiar or tiara, or from attire.] A head-dress.

On her head she wore a tire of gold,
Adorn'd with gems andouches.

Spenser.

Here is her picture : let me see ;

If I had such a tire, this face of mine

Were full as lovely as this face of hers.

Shakspeare.

The judge of torments, and the king of tears,

Now fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire,

And for his old fair robes of light he wears

A gloomy mantle of dark flame ; the tire

That crowns his hated head, on high appears.

Crashaw.

When the fury took her stand on high,

A hiss from all the snaky tire went round.

Pope.

To TIRE. v. a. [tipan, tipian, Sax.]

1. To fatigue ; to make weary ; to harass ;

to wear out with labour or tediousness.

Tir'd with toil, all hopes of safety past,

From pray'rs to wishes he descends at last.

Dryden.

For this a hundred voices I desire,

To tell thee what a hundred tongues would tire ;

Yet never could be worthily express,

How deeply thou art seated in my breast.

Dryden, Pers.

2. It has often out added to intend the signification.

Often a few that are stiff do tire out a greater number that are more moderate.

Bacon, Essays.

A lonely way

The cheerless Albion wander'd half a day ;

Tir'd out, at length a spreading stream he spy'd.

Tickell.

3. [From attire or tire, from tiara.] To dress the head.

Jezebel painted her face, and tired her head.

2 Kings, ix. 30.

To TIRE.† v. n. [ceopian, Sax.] To fail with weariness.

A merry heart goes all the day,

Your sad tires in a mile-a.

Shaks. Wint. Tale.

To TIRE.* v. n. [tipan, Sax. is found in the same sense.] To feed or prey upon :

an old and well authorized verb.

Looke how that a goshauke tireth.

Gower, Conf. Am.

An eagle every day sat tiring upon his liver, and wasting it.

Bacon, Prometh.

Whose haughty spirit winged with desire

Will coast my crown, and like an empty eagle

Tire on the flesh of me and of my son.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

Ye dregs of baseness, vultures amongst men,

That tire upon the hearts of generous spirits :—

You do us wrong, sir, we tire no generous spi-

ts ; we tire nothing but our hackneys.

Beaumont and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

TIR'DNESS. n. s. [from tired.] State of being tired ; weariness.

It is not through the tiredness of the age of the earth, but through our own negligence that it hath not satisfied us bountifully.

Hakewill on Providence.

TIR'SOME. adj. [from tire.] Wearisome ;

fatiguing ; tedious.

Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome to the reader, the poet must sometimes relieve the subject with a pleasant and pertinent digression.

Addison.

Nothing is so tiresome as the works of those criticks who write in a dogmatick way, without language, genius, or imagination.

Addison.

TIR'SOMENESS. n. s. [from tiresome.] Act or quality of being tiresome.

TIREWOMAN. n. s. [tire and woman.] A woman whose business is to make dresses for the head.

Why should they not value themselves for this outside fashionableness of the tirewoman's making, when their parents have so early instructed them to do so ?

Locke on Education.

TIRINGHOUSE.† n. s. [tire and house, or

TIRINGROOM.† room.] The room in which players dress for the stage.

This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn

brake our tiringhouse.

Shakspeare.

Man's life's a tragedy ; his mother's womb,

From which he enters, is the tiringroom ;

This spacious earth the theatre, and the stage

That country which he lives in ; passions, rage,

Polly, and vice, are actors.

Wotton.

TYRWIT. n. s. [vanellus, Lat.] A bird.

Ainsworth.

'Tis, contracted for it is.

'Tis destiny unshunnable.

tive.

TYSSUE. n. s. [tissu, Fr. tipan, To weave,

Norman Saxon.] Cloth interwoven with gold or silver, or figured colours.

In their glittering tissues emblaz'd

Holy memorials, acts of zeal and love,

Recorded eminent.

Milton, P. L.

A robe of tissue, stiff with golden wire ;

An upper vest, once Helen's rich attire ;

From Argos by the fam'd adulteress brought,

With golden flowers and winding foliage wrought.

Dryden.

To TYSSUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To interweave ; to variegate.

The chariot was covered with cloth of gold tissued upon blue.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

They have been always frank of their blessings to countenance any great action ; and then, according as it should prosper, to tissue upon it some pretence or other.

Wotton.

Mercy will sit between,

Thron'd in celestial sheen,

With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering.

Milton, Ode.

TIT.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson has here offered no etymon ; but observes, under titmouse, that tit signifies little in the Teutonic dialects. Thus Kilian, tijte, Teut. any small bird, to which he adds from Gesner, "De juvenibus ignavis vulgò dicitur, quòd sunt pulchri titi."] 1. A small horse : generally in contempt.

No storing of pasture with baggage tit,

With ragged, with aged, and evil at hit.

Tusser.

Thou might'st have ta'en example

From what thou read'st in story ;

Being as worthy to sit

On an ambling tit

As thy predecessor Dory.

Denham.

2. A woman : in contempt.

A vast virago, or an ugly tit.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 524.

Am I one

Selected out of all the husbands living,

To be so ridden by a tit of tempest ?

Am I so blind and bedrid ?

Beaumont and Fl. Tam. Tamed.

What does this envious tit, but away to her father with a tale.

L'Estrange.

A willing tit that will venture her corps with you.

Short pains for thee, for me a son and heir,

Girls cost as many throes in bringing forth ;

Beside, when born, the tits are little worth.

Dryden.

3. A titmouse or tomit. [parus, Lat.] A bird.

TYTBIT. n. s. [properly tidbit ; tid, tender, and bit.] Nice bit ; nice food.

grew wanton.

Arbutnot.

TITHABLE. adj. [from tithe.] Subject to the payment of tithes ; that of which tithes may be taken.

The popish priest shall, on taking the oath of allegiance to his majesty, be entitled to a tenth part or tithe of all things tithable in Ireland belonging to the papists, within their respective parishes.

Swift.

TITHE. n. s. [τεθοα, Saxon, tenth.]

1. The tenth part ; the part assigned to the maintenance of the ministry.

Many have made witty invectives against usury ; they say, that it is pity the devil should have God's part, which is the tithe.

Bacon.

Sometimes comes she with a tithe pig's tail,

Tickling the parson as he lies asleep,

Then dreams he of another benefice.

Shaks.

2. The tenth part of any thing.

I have searched man by man, boy by boy ; the tithe of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Shakspeare.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Ev'ry tithe soul 'mongst many thousand dimes

Hath been as dear as Helen.

Shaks. Tr. and Cress.

3. Small part ; small portion, unless it be misprinted for tilles.

Offensive wars for religion are seldom to be approved, unless they have some mixture of civil tithes.

Bacon.

To TITHE. v. a. [τεθοιαν, Saxon.] To tax ; to levy the tenth part.

When I come to the tithing of them, I will tithe them one with another, and will make an Irishman the tithingman.

Spenser on Ireland.

By decimation and a tithed death,

If thy revenges hunger for that food

Which nature loaths, take thou the destin'd tenth.

Shakspeare.

When thou hast made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increase, the third year, the year of tithing, give unto the Levite, stranger, fatherless, and widow.

Deut. xxvi. 12.

To TITHE. v. n. To pay tithe.

For lambe, pig, and calf, and for other the like,

Tithe so as thy cattle the Lord do not strike.

Tusser.

TITHEFREE.* adj. Exempt from payment of tithe.

All estates subject to tithes were transmitted, or purchased, subject to this incumbrance ; for which the purchaser must have paid a greater price, and the farmer a higher rent, if they had been tithe-free.

Abp. Hort, Charge to the Clergy.

TITHER.† n. s. [from tithing.] One who gathers tithes.

Thus far tithers themselves have contributed to their own confutation.

Milton, Consid. to remove Hirelings out of the Church.

TITHING.† n. s. [tithing, Sax.]

1. Tithing is the number or company of ten men with their families knit together in a society, all of them being bound to the king for the peaceable and good behaviour of each of their society : of these companies there was one chief person, who, from his office, was called (toothingman) tithingman ; but now he is nothing but a constable.

Cowel.

Poor Tom, who is whipt from tithing to tithing, and stock punished and imprisoned.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Tithe ; tenth part due to the priest.

Though vicar be bad, or the parson evil,

Go not for thy tithing thyself to the devil.

Tusser.

TITHINGMAN. n. s. [tithing and man.]

A petty peace-officer ; an under-constable.

His hundred is not at his command further than his prince's service; and also every thingman may controul him. Spenser.

TYMAL.† n. s. [tithymalle, French; tithymallus, Lat.] An herb. Sherwood.
Rubbing the stem with cowdung, or a decoction of tithymale. Evelyn, ii. vii. § 19.

TITILLATE. v. n. [titillo, Lat.] To tickle.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct to every atom just
The pungent grains of titillating dust. Pope.

TITILLATION. n. s. [titillation, French; titillatio, Lat. from titillate.]

The act of tickling.
Tickling causeth laughter: the cause may be the emission of the spirits, and so of the breath, by a flight from titillation. Bacon.

The state of being tickled.

In sweets, the acid particles seem so attenuated in the oil as only to produce a small and grateful titillation. Arbuthnot.

Any slight or petty pleasure.

The delights which result from these nobler entertainments our cool thoughts need not be ashamed of, and which are dogged by no such sad sequels as are the products of those titillations, that reach no higher than the senses. Glanville.

TTLARK. n. s. A bird. See TIT, and TITMOUSE.

The smaller birds do like in their seasons; as the levercock, tittlar, and linnet. Walton.

TITLE.† n. s. [titul, Saxon; titelle, old Fr. titulus, Lat.]

A general head comprising particulars.

Three draw the experiments of the former four into titles and tables for the better drawing of observations; and these we call compilers. Bacon.

Among the many preferences that the laws of England have above others, I shall single out two particular titles, which give a handsome specimen of their excellencies above other laws in other parts or titles of the same. Hale.

• An appellation of honour.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion, and his titles, in a place
From whence himself does fly. Shaks. Macbeth.
Man over men

He made not lord : such title to himself
Reserving. Milton, P. L.

• A name; an appellation.

My name's Macbeth.
— The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Ill worthy I such title should belong
To me transgressor. Milton, P. L.

• The first page of a book, telling its name, and generally its subject; an inscription.

This man's brow, like to a title leaf,
Foretels the nature of a tragick volume. Shakspeare.

Our adversaries encourage a writer who cannot furnish out so much as a title page with propriety. Swift.

Others with wishful eyes on glory look,
When they have got their picture t'wards a book;
Or pompous title, like a gaudy sign Meant to betray dull sots to wretched wine. Young.

• A claim of right.

Let the title of a man's right be called in question; are we not bold to rely and build upon the judgment of such as are famous for their skill in the laws? Hooker.

Is a man impoverished by purchase? it is because he paid his money for a lye, and took a bad title for a good. South.

'Tis our duty
Such monuments, as we can build, to raise;
Lest all the world prevent what we should do,
And claim a title in him by their praise. Dryden.

If there were no laws to protect them, there were no living in this world for good men; and in effect there would be no laws, if it were a sin in them to try a title, or right themselves by them. Kettlewell.

To revenge their common injuries, though you had an undoubted title by your birth, you had a greater by your courage. Dryden.

Conti would have kept his title to Orange. Addison.

O the discretion of a girl! she will be a slave to any thing that has not a title to make her one. Southen.

TO TITLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entitle; to name; to call.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame,
Ignobly! Milton, P. L.

TITLELESS.† adj. [from title.] Wanting a name or appellation. Not now in use.

A titleless tyrant
And an outlaw. Chaucer, Mancip. Tale.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name o' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakspeare, Coriol.

We should have been pleased to have seen our own names at the bottom of the titlepage. Dryden.

TITMOUSE, or tit. n. s. [tijt, Dutch, a chick, or small bird; tintlingier, Icelandick, a little bird: tit signifies little in the Teutonic dialects.] A small bird.

The nightingale is sovereign of song;
Before him sits the timouse silent by;
And I unfit to thrust in skilful throng,
Should Colin make judge of my foolerie. Spenser.
The timouse and the peckers' hungry brood,
And Progne with her bosom stain'd in blood. Dryden.

TO TIT'TER.† v. n. [formed, I suppose, from the sound. Dr. Johnson. — Rather perhaps from teitir, Icel. very merry.] To laugh with restraint; to laugh without much noise.

In flow'd at once a gay embroider'd race,
And tit'tir push'd the pedants off the place. Pope.
The swain, mistrustless of his smutt'd face,
While secret laughter titt'r'd round the place. Goldsmith, Deserted Village.

TIT'TER.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A restrained laugh.

The belle's shrill tittler, and the squire's broad stare. Neville, Imit. of Juv. p. 84.

2. I know not what it signifies in Tusser.

From what go and rake out the titters or time,
If eare be not forth, it will rise again fine. Tusser.

TIT'TLE.† n. s. [I suppose from tit. Dr. Johnson. — German, tuttel, punctum, apex, ab obsolete Anglo-Sax. ðyban, figere, pungere. Wachter, and Serenius.] A small particle; a point; a dot.

In the particular which concerned the church, the Scotch would never depart from a tit'tle. Clarendon.

Angels themselves disdaining
To approach thy temple, give thee in command
What to the smallest tit'tle thou shalt say
To thy adorers. Milton, P. R.

They thought God and themselves linked in so fast a covenant, that although they never performed their part, God was yet bound to make good every tit'tle of his. South.

Ned Fashion hath been bred about court, and understands to a tit'tle all the punctilios of a drawing-room. Swift.

You are not advanced one tit'tle towards the proof of what you intend. Waterland.

TIT'TLETATTLE.† n. s. [A word formed from tattle by a ludicrous reduplication.]

1. Idle talk; prattle; empty gabble.

As the foe drew near
With love, and joy, and life, and dear,
Our don, who knew this tit'tletattle,
Did, sure as trumpet, call to battle. Prior.

For every idle tit'tletattle that went about, Jack was suspected for the author. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

2. An idle talker. Sherwood.

Impertinent tit'tle-tattles, who have no other variety in their discourse than that of talking slower or faster. Tatler, No. 157.

TO TIT'TLETATTLE.† v. n. [from tattle.] To prate idly.

You must be tit'tle-tattling before all our guests! Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

TIT'TLEAT'TLING.† n. s. The act of prating idly.

You are full in your tit'tletattlings of Cupid: here is Cupid, and there is Cupid: I will tell you now what a good old woman told me. Sidney.

TO TITUBATE.* v. n. [titubato, Lat.] To stumble. This is an old verb in Cockram's vocabulary. Dr. Johnson uses it in one of his definitions of to trip.

But what became of this titubating, this towering mountain of snow?

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653,) p. 29

TITUBATION. n. s. [titubato, Lat.] The act of stumbling.

TITULAR. adj. [titulaire, Fr. from titulus, Lat.] Nominal; having or conferring only the title.

They would deliver up the kingdom to the king of England to shadow their rebellion, and to be titular and painted head of those arms. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Thrones, virtues, powers,
If these magnific titles yet remain,
Not merely titular. Milton, P. L.
Both Valerius and Austin were titular bishops. Ayliffe.

TITULARITY. n. s. [from titular.] The state of being titular.

Julius, Augustus, and Tiberius, with great humility received the name of imperator; but their successors retain the same even in its titularity.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

TITULARLY.* adv. [from titular.] Nominally; by title only.

The church representative is a general council; not titularly so, as the conventicle of Trent; but plenerly true, general, and lawful.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 116.

TITULARY. adj. [titulaire, Fr. from titulus, Lat.]

1. Consisting in a title.

The malecontents of his kingdom have not been base nor titular impostors, but of an higher nature. Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. Relating to a title.

William the Conqueror, howsoever he used the power of a conqueror to reward his Normans, yet mixed it with a titulary pretence grounded upon the Confessor's will. Bacon.

TITULARY. n. s. [from the adj.] One that has a title or right.

The persons deputed for the celebration of these masses were neither titularies nor perpetual curates, but persons entirely conductionis. Ayliffe, Parergon.

TIT'VY. A word expressing speed, from tantivy, the note of a hunting-horn.

In a bright moon-shine while winds whistle loud,
Tivy, tivy, tivy, we mount and we fly,
All rocking in a downy white cloud;

ADDENDA.

INCLI'NABLENESS.* n. s. [from inclinable.] Favourable disposition.

The things that facilitated his conquest were—the pope's encouragement, and the inclinableness of the clergy to his cause.

Brady's Introd. to Old Eng. Hist. (1684,) p. 16.

INCONSUMPTIBLE.† This word, of which so much is said, is of the Elizabethan age.

Cyprian doth not call this sacrament the only inconsumptible victim.

Fulke on the Rhemish N. Test. 1 Cor. x. 21.

INFORM.† Bishop Jeremy Taylor also uses this adjective.

The lawyers and physicians distinguish the time of the abortion; if the child was efformed into human shape, it is capital by the laws; but not, if it was inform and unshapen.

Bp. Taylor, Duct. Dubitant. (ed. 1696,) p. 789.

INSOLENCE.† This substantive was formerly used (like insolent for unaccustomed) in the sense of unusualness. See INSOLENT.

My lord, the insolence of this address will hereafter receive an alloy, even in your lordship's own judgement.

Martin's Hosannah, Sermon at Oxf. (1660,) Dedication.

TO KERSEN, or KIRSEN.* v. a. This appears to have been an old way of writing christen, as well as now in some places of pronouncing it; which should be added to what I have said of this verb.

It is lawful to kyrson a child, &c.

Protest. in 1536, &c. Strype's Eccl. Mem. Records, vol. i. p. 176.

MEDIOCRE.† adj. Warburton in a note on Shakspeare's K. Lear uses this word, and Edwards in his Canons of Criticism appears to ridicule it as an affected term. Can. of Crit. ed. 1758, p. 98.

TO MISTATE. This word, and MISTATEMENT, ought to be written MIS-STATE, MIS-STATEMENT.

NAUSEA'TION.* n. s. [from To nauseate.] The act of nauseating.

If any of our people loath this manna because they may gather it from under their feet, let not their palates be humoured in this wanton nauseation.

Bp. Hall, Old Religion, Epist. Ded.

PO'LEMIST.* n. s. [πολεμιστής, Gr.] A controvertist.

In all his writings, (Bishop Kennet's,) whether as an antiquary or a polemist, there are no traces of tergiversation or temporizing.

Nichols, Lit. Anecd. vol. i. p. 397.

PO'LEMY. n. s. [πόλεμος, Gr.] Contention; opposition; warfare. Not, however, in use, though polemical is common.

For perfect polem in letters, you may guess what our universities can yield, by observing our trained bands at common musters.

Sir E. Dering's Speeches, (1641,) p. 150.

REMITMENT.† n. s. A second definition may be added, viz. Remission.

All law, and God's law especially, grants every where to errour easy remittments.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

TO REMONSTRATE.* v. a. The following example is a century older than that which has been given.

Her majesty's party and priests did so pleasingly remonstrate to him the sin of this amour.

Sir J. Reresby's Memoirs, p. 230.

SURD.† Add this example to the third definition.

The effect of surd necessity.

Baxter on the Soul, vol. ii. p. 395.

VIDUA'TION. n. s. [from viduatus, Lat.] Loss; bereavement; deprivation.

Their triumphs rise from the church's viduation, from her learning's contempt and prostration. Waterhouse, Apol. for Learning, (1653,) p. 149.

UNCTION.† To the concluding definition add this apposite example from Johnson's biographer.

I have found in the Pensées de Pascal a truly divine unction.

Boswell's Life of Johnson.

the nephew of Milton; and many of the criticisms in the first-named book, bespeaking the hand of a master, are justly, I think, believed to be Milton's. He published also the dictionary, entitled, The New World of English Words; and here again he was perhaps somewhat indebted to the labours of his immortal kinsman: for, as Aubrey informs us, the imperfect Latin Dictionary of Milton in manuscript came into his hands, which, many years after the publication of his World of Words, had been obtained by the editors of the Cambridge Latin and English Dictionary, as the Preface to that Dictionary informs us Ch. II.
